You say you'd like a few suggestions on how to get more out of your telephone service?

Here are five tips to help make your every "hello" a real good buy:

1. Be clear and concise. Save everyone's time. Don't use the phone as a substitute for letters or written documents. Be brief and to the point. Don't repeat the same information several times. Ask only the questions you need to ask. Don't use the phone for personal conversations.

2. Use the right kind of phone. If you're looking for a business phone, you might consider a cordless phone. Cordless phones are more expensive, but they have many advantages. They're easy to use, and they can be set up in almost any room in your house. They're also less likely to break than a wired phone. You can also consider a phone with a caller ID function. Caller ID is a great feature for people who get a lot of phone calls. It can help you know who's calling before you answer the phone.

3. Consider a phone with a answering machine. Answering machines are a good choice for people who are often away from home. They can leave messages for you, and you can listen to them whenever you have time. Answering machines are also useful for people who have to deal with a lot of junk mail. You can leave a message telling the sender not to call, and you can ignore the junk mail.

4. Be careful of phone scams. Phone scams are a common problem, and they can cost you a lot of money. Be careful of people who call you and say they can help you with your telephone bill. They might be trying to steal your money.

5. Try to avoid long-distance charges. Long-distance charges are often higher than local calls. You can avoid long-distance charges by calling during off-peak hours. Off-peak hours are usually between 6:00 and 9:00 a.m. and evenings. You can also try calling at night, when the phone is not as busy.
