The recent developments in the situation in the Middle East should serve as a reminder of what we are up against in the fields of energy and the economy.

The OPEC oil embargo and the subsequent price increases have had a profound impact on the global economy, causing inflation and economic instability. This has led to a decrease in consumer spending and production, resulting in a slowdown in economic growth.

The energy crisis has also raised concerns about the long-term sustainability of the energy infrastructure and the need for alternative energy sources. This has led to increased investment in renewable energy technologies and a shift towards more energy-efficient practices.

As we look towards the future, it is important to recognize the challenges we face and the need for continued innovation and collaboration to address these issues.

In John 14:21, Jesus said to His disciples, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give you. Not as the world gives do I give to you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." In preparing to go to a new place, Jesus said to His disciples, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give you. Not as the world gives do I give to you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid. You heard me say to you that I am going to my Father. Where I go you know the way." Jesus knew that the disciples would have fear and anxiety about the future, but He assured them that He would give them peace. The peace that Jesus gives is not the same as the peace of the world, which is temporary and fleeting. The peace that Jesus gives is an inner peace that comes from knowing that He is with them and that He is going to prepare a place for them in heaven. When we trust in Jesus and His promise of peace, we can have confidence that He will take care of us and that nothing can separate us from His love.
