Need Reform

When the first U.S. regulatory officials began to act on the vague and undeveloped research findings of the early 1960s, they had yet to realize that a federal agency would have to cut a path through the clouds of ignorance and public opinion. The need for the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) and the passage of the Clean Air Act in 1970, when the act was signed into law, demonstrated the need for the EPA.

Leaders’ Job

The leaders of an organization are responsible for guiding the organization's direction and making important decisions. They are the ones who set the strategic vision for the organization and are held accountable for its success.
