Tax Attack Hits Military Men

By Ellma M. Johnson

The outlook for military men is not bright. A bill was recently introduced in the Senate by Senator Robert Byrd which would raise the income tax for soldiers to 2% above the current rate of 7 1/2%. This new rate would apply to all military personnel, including veterans and military retirees.

The bill was prompted by a desire to increase the federal budget and to reduce the national debt. However, many soldiers and veterans are concerned about the impact of this bill on their ability to support their families.

Supporters of the bill argue that military personnel are already receiving a large amount of pay and benefits, and that they should contribute more to the federal budget. Opponents argue that the bill would be unfair to soldiers and veterans who are already serving their country.

The bill has not yet been passed by Congress, and it remains to be seen whether it will ultimately be enacted. In the meantime, soldiers and veterans are left to wonder about the impact of this bill on their finances and their ability to support their families.
