Productivity cuts inflation

There is a growing chorus of voices that warn against inflation. The argument is that inflation is a danger to the economy and society alike. Although much has been written about the stability of the economy, there is a growing concern that inflation could undermine the stability of the system. The argument is that inflation could lead to a decline in confidence in the economy, and that could lead to a recession. The argument is that inflation could lead to a decline in consumption, and that could lead to a downturn in the economy.
