SALT II treaty lacks equivalence

By Ralph Nader

The recent SALT II treaty, signed by the United States and the Soviet Union, is a tragic mistake that could lead to a new arms race. The treaty, which was signed in November 1979, limits the number of strategic nuclear weapons each country can possess. However, it does not address the issue of the quality and effectiveness of those weapons. The United States and the Soviet Union have vastly different capabilities in terms of their nuclear arsenals. The treaty does not take into account the fact that the United States has more advanced technology and better-trained personnel, which gives it a significant advantage in terms of nuclear warfare. The treaty also fails to address the issue of the proliferation of nuclear weapons, which poses a threat to the stability of the world.

Energy savings can curb costs

By Ann E. Brown

Energy savings is a crucial issue for our country, and we must take steps to ensure that we do not waste valuable resources. Energy costs are increasing at an alarming rate, and we must find ways to reduce our consumption of energy. One way to do this is to adopt energy-efficient technologies and practices. We can reduce our energy consumption by using insulated windows, installing a new roof, and reducing our reliance on air conditioning. We can also use renewable energy sources, such as solar and wind power, to generate electricity. These measures will not only save us money, but they will also help to protect the environment.

Right to know in jeopardy

By William J. Bennett

The right to know is a fundamental right that must be protected. The recent trend of government secrecy and the withholding of information from the public threatens this fundamental right. The government has a responsibility to ensure that the public has access to information that affects their lives. This includes information about the safety of products, the effectiveness of government programs, and the actions of the government. The government must ensure that the public has access to this information in a timely and transparent manner.

Letter to the editor

By Jack Johnson

I am writing to express my concern about the recent events in Syria. The government of Syria has been using chemical weapons against its own citizens, and this is a violation of international law. The United States and other countries must take action to prevent this from happening. We must ensure that the Syrian government is held accountable for its actions and that it is held to its obligations under international law. We must also provide assistance to the people of Syria, who are suffering greatly.

Dee's Doodles

By Dee Brown

Here is a funny cartoon about a man who is trying to catch a fish in a pond. He is using a fishing line, but the fish is not biting. The man is getting frustrated, but he keeps trying. Finally, he manages to catch the fish. The moral of the story is that persistence pays off.
