IRS matches returns with forms, statements

The Internal Revenue Service has matched returns with forms, statements and other data bank records to check for more than 500,000 potential fraud cases. In some cases, the service has sent notices of discrepancies to taxpayers and requested corrections or further information. In others, the agency has referred cases to the newly formed Office of Fraud Detection and Enforcement for further investigation.

The Office of Fraud Detection and Enforcement was established in July 1980 to coordinate federal efforts to combat tax fraud. The office is responsible for implementing the IRS fraud control strategy, which includes identifying and investigating potential fraud cases, developing and maintaining a computerized fraud database, and coordinating with other federal agencies.

The office has developed a number of tools to help it identify potential fraud cases, including the use of statistical analysis and data mining techniques to identify patterns of suspicious behavior. It has also developed a computerized fraud database that contains information on more than 10 million taxpayers, including their tax returns, bank statements, and other financial records.

The office has referred more than 1,000 cases to the Department of Justice for criminal prosecution, and has recovered more than $150 million in tax dollars through civil actions and other means. The office has also developed a number of educational programs to help taxpayers understand their responsibilities and to prevent tax fraud.

The office is committed to working with other federal agencies and private sector partners to combat tax fraud and to ensure that taxpayers are paying their fair share of taxes.

New approach may aid raising of money

Commissioners have mixed feelings over proposal

A new approach to raising money for the city government was presented to the city council last week. The commissioners were divided over the proposal, some supporting it, others opposing it.

The proposal involves creating a non-profit corporation to handle the collection of city funds. The idea is that the corporation would be exempt from city taxes, allowing it to operate with a lower cost structure.
