Interest of public must be protected

The proposal of the nation’s two major labor organizations to work with the government in establishing a national health care program is an example of how the public interest can be protected through collective bargaining.

The proposals are designed to provide health care for all Americans, regardless of income or employment status. They include provisions for universal coverage, mandatory employer-provided health insurance, and a nationwide network of health clinics.

Your Social Security

Capitol Avenue

A few weeks ago, I was invited to a party in honor of a friend who is celebrating his 80th birthday. As I walked into the room, I noticed a sign that said, “No Social Security allowed.” I smiled and thought to myself, “Well, that’s one way to keep the party lively.”

Mike Kelley says

‘I’m no longer with it’

By Mike Kelley

I have always been a bit of a rebel. When I was young, I would often find myself in trouble with my parents. They would always tell me to “straighten up and fly right,” but I never could. I was always pushing the boundaries and challenging the status quo.

As I got older, I continued to rebel against the system. I would always find myself in trouble with the law. My parents would always yell at me, “You’re no good,” but I never could change. I was always pushing the boundaries and challenging the status quo.

The truth is, I am no longer with it. I have come to realize that I am not the one to blame. It is the system that is at fault. I am no longer with it. I have come to realize that I am not the one to blame. It is the system that is at fault.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Watchwords

by John Pater

Last week's Panola Watchman featured an article about the state of the local economy. The article was well written and well researched, but it left me with a few questions.

First, what is the definition of a local economy? Is it the sum total of all economic activity that takes place within a given geographic area? If so, then the local economy must be very diverse, given the wide range of economic activities that take place in a given area.

Second, what is the role of the government in the local economy? Is the government simply a neutral party that provides a framework for economic activity, or does it actively participate in the local economy?

Finally, what is the role of the individual in the local economy? Is the individual simply a consumer of goods and services, or does he or she play a more active role in the local economy?

The answers to these questions are important, as they will determine the direction in which the local economy is heading. It is important that we as a community understand the role of the government, the role of the individual, and the role of the local economy in shaping the future of our community.
