Dairymen stress herd management

Learning to farm, students at the Texas A&M University-Dallas Center learned during a recent trip to the farm area.

One of the main purposes of the trip was to learn about herd management. The trip included visits to several dairies in the area.

Some of the topics covered during the trip included:
- Nutrition management
- Health and disease control
- Reproduction control
- Record-keeping

The trip also included a visit to a processing plant where students were able to see the different stages of milk processing and packaging.

Con artist schemes explained 'AARP hears 'Bunco' program

The American Association of Retired Persons (AARP) has received a report of a new type of con artist scheme that has been trailed as a 'Bunco' program.

In this scheme, con artists may contact individuals through the mail or phone, offering to provide a package or service that requires a down payment. The con artists may then lead the victim into a series of additional payments, which are never delivered.

The AARP encourages individuals to be cautious and to verify the legitimacy of any such offers before making any payments.

New About People

West Park District of Dallas has been named the recipient of a grant from the city to help improve the district's public facilities.

The grant will be used to fund improvements to the district's parks, playgrounds, and community centers.

The grant is part of the city's overall effort to improve the quality of life for residents in the West Park District.

The Tree Crank'

W. Goodrich Jones' legacy — the father of forestry in Texas — hung loosely, like a slack overcoat, on the bespectacled tree watchermaker's son.

Jones, a Temple banker, had none of the trappings usually associated with Texas' forest figures. He was quiet, frail, scholarly.

Yet, in the early years of this century, Jones stumped across Texas to found the movement that ended the cut-out and get-out policies of the old hardwood loggers and prodded ranchers into reforestation and protection policies responsible for the efficiency of today's forests.

Jones created no timberland. But he loved trees, and frequently expressed his fervency in newspaper articles and letters — a crusade that tipped him as 'the tree crank.'

In 1904, Jones rallied the state's forest interests and founded the Texas Forestry Association. A year later, he manhandled his forest again and persuaded the Texas Legislature to create a forestry department at Texas A&M University — forerunner of today's Texas Forest Service.

In the next 30 years, Jones saw Texas' forests literally regress through shrinking and fire protection. He witnessed the establishment of the Texas National Forests, the development of a billion-dollar forest products industry, and a state forest named in his honor.

The achievements of men like W. Goodrich Jones will endure forever in East Texas, a heritage to the unique heritage of the land and its people.

As a principal contributor to East Texas forest-based economy, we at ST. Regis want to be a part of that heritage.

We don't just work here... we live here.
