The American Medical Association is warning that physicians and patients are being denied needed medical care because the doctors may have to be cut off and sent to the troubled area. Which is too bad for the doctors, but is it helpful for the patients who may be suffering? The doctors say they are being forced to work longer hours and that they have to work on weekends. They say they are being forced to take shorter breaks and that they are being forced to work in conditions that are not safe. They say they are being forced to work in conditions that are not conducive to providing quality care. The First Wildcatter

Nearly 115 years ago, a slender Melrose storekeeper with a hankering for wealth uncorrupted Texas' wildest and richest era. He struck oil.

But the fortune he triggered for others eluded him. After bringing in Texas' first producing well, he lost his savings and those of his wife and died in obscurity.

Lyne Tallaferro Barret, whose Virginia parents had brought him to Texas as a child, returned from duty in the Civil War to drill a crude well in 1866 near some "oily springs" in Nacogdoches County. Pure oil spurted to the surface.

Barret quickly caught oil fever. He packed his valise and headed by stagecoach to Pennsylvania to seek capital for drilling additional wells.

At Titusville, where the nation's first oil well had been drilled in 1859, Barret found backing and money. He returned to Texas and drilled a second hole a mile away from the first. But it was a duster.

Barret's backers pulled off and the storekeeper, unable to raise money on his own, quit the oil business.

Barret died without recognition and his first well almost escaped historical appreciation. But in 1960, on the 100th anniversary of his well, Texas historians lifted Barret's memory from the mists of time and built at Nacogdoches a memorial to the wily Confederate veteran who launched the Texas oil industry...

The achievements of men like Lyne Tallaferro Barret will endure forever in East Texas, a lasting legacy to the unique heritage of the land and its people.

As a principal contributor to the East Texas economy, we at St. Regis want to be part of that heritage.

We don't just work here...we live here.
