Tehran defies rebukes of UN

For the better part of a year, President Bush has been using the United Nations as an alternative to military action against Iraq. The UN Security Council, which has condemned Iraq's illegal weapons programs, has become the focal point of the Bush administration's efforts to build international support for a war against Iraq.

However, the UN Security Council has been increasingly divided and unable to agree on a single course of action. The US has been pressing for stronger sanctions against Iraq, while other member states, including China and Russia, have been pushing for a more diplomatic approach.

Meanwhile, Iran has been increasingly carving out a role for itself on the world stage, even as it continues to defy international pressure to abandon its nuclear program. The US and its allies have recently begun to consider the possibility of military action against Iran, but the UN is unlikely to play a central role in any such decision.

Dear Reader,

I hope you're having a pleasant holiday season. As we approach the end of the year, I wanted to take a moment to reflect on the past year and the challenges we've faced. Despite the difficulties, there are many reasons to be hopeful for the future.

In the past year, we've seen significant progress in addressing climate change, with a growing number of countries committing to reduce their greenhouse gas emissions. This is a crucial step forward, but there's still much work to be done.

I'm particularly encouraged by the efforts of the COP26 conference in Glasgow, where a broad range of nations came together to discuss and agree on a plan to address climate change.

Looking ahead, I believe we have the opportunity to create a more just and sustainable world. But it will require us to work together, to listen to each other, and to act with compassion and empathy.

I wish you all a happy and healthy holiday season, and I look forward to continuing to work with you in the year ahead.

Sincerely,

Bob Deen
Know Your Heritage

The heritage of Waskom is the story of the people who have been here before, the trail-blazers of yesterday and the pioneers of today. It is a story that must be told, preserved, and passed on to future generations.

The citizens of Waskom have a rich heritage to be proud of. From the early days of settlement to the present, their history is one of perseverance and progress. From the days when the mill was the heart of the community to the present day, when the town is a hub of commerce and industry, the story of Waskom is a story of progress and growth.
