Winners of the 1962 Christmas Parade in Carthage, Texas, are featured on this page. The parade was a popular event among residents and visitors alike, highlighting the festive spirit of the holiday season. The float designs were diverse, reflecting the creativity and skill of the participants. The winning entries were awarded prizes and recognition for their contributions. The page also includes an advertisement for the Ben Franklin Toy Town, showcasing the variety of toys available for purchase.

The Panola Watchman, a local newspaper, covered the event, providing detailed information on the winners and their float designs. This clipping offers a glimpse into the community's celebration of Christmas 1962, emphasizing the joy and creativity that such events bring to the area. The newspaper's coverage also serves as a historical record, offering insights into the traditions and values that were upheld during that time period.

Sensing the News

A new foreign policy

By Anthony Mantex
White House sources Thursday night indicated that a new foreign policy had been established. The sources added that the president had decided to take a more active role in the international arena, and that he would be working closely with his national security team to develop a new strategy.

Out Of The Past

From the files of the Pamela Watchman

By Terry Miko
Pamela Watchman's parents, both former employees of the Watchman, were given an interview about their daughter's past.

The Pamela Watchman

A letter was sent to the Watchman from the family of Pamela Watchman, expressing their grief and offering condolences. The letter also thanked the Watchman for its care and support during Pamela's illness.

Off The Hook

The problem with the Watchman's online presence has been resolved. The website is now fully functional and accessible to all users.

Christmas Nostalgia

For most people Christmas in the past, good and bad times, are the most memorable. Many use it as a time to reflect about their past and how they would like to change things in their lives. It is a time when people feel nostalgic and怀旧 about the past, which can lead to depression. It is a time when people feel nostalgic and 怀旧 about the past, which can lead to depression.

Cold victims should avoid exercise in bad weather

Since the cold vices the heart, the elderly, and people with heart disease should avoid exercise in bad weather. This is especially true if you have a history of heart disease or are taking medications for heart conditions. In addition, people with chronic respiratory conditions such as asthma or chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD) should also avoid exercise in cold weather, as the cold air can trigger bronchospasm and exacerbate their condition.

Balance wildlife, available forage

The availability of forage is crucial for wildlife to sustain themselves. However, if the forage is too sparse or if the wildlife population is too large, the balance can be disrupted, leading to negative consequences such as overgrazing and soil erosion. To maintain the balance, it is important to manage the wildlife population and the available forage to ensure that both are sustainable.

Being informed is important

It is important to be informed about your insurance, as you may not be aware of the changes that may affect your coverage. This can lead to situations where you may not be properly covered or may not know about the options available to you. Therefore, it is important to be informed about your insurance to ensure that you are protected.
