Spa membership campaign opens

A preventative maintenance campaign for a proposed health spa in the city has been announced by Mayor Baldwin and her staff. The campaign targets those who have shown interest in joining the spa, which would feature complete but separate facilities for men and women.

"We feel it's important to engage each individual or business in this process," Mayor Baldwin said.

"This will also allow us to map out the necessary infrastructure that will be needed for the health spa," she added.

Preventative maintenance is being offered to owners, both private and public, to ensure the health spa is completed in a timely manner.

"This will allow us to create an informed decision about what the health spa needs," Mayor Baldwin continued.

"We will also be able to provide a more comprehensive plan for the health spa," she added.

On the other hand, the membership fees will be automatically higher.

"In addition to the preventative maintenance fee, members will also be charged a fee to cover the costs of running the health spa," Mayor Baldwin said.

The fees cover either individual or an entire family.

"We want everyone that lives here in a faster and healthier manner," Mayor Baldwin said.

"We want to give everyone a year of free membership, and we don't want them to feel like they have to pay extra," she added.

Donors are being asked to provide the funds needed to complete the health spa, but not all are interested.

"We've already had one individual interested, and there are several others who want to get involved," Mayor Baldwin said.

"But we will be happy to accept donations from anyone," she said.
