Squirrel leaves without photo
By Carl Chambers

The day I finally got to photograph that squirrel, I didn't get the shot I wanted. In fact, I didn't even get a good picture of the squirrel. It was a challenging task. I had been trying to capture a picture of the squirrel for weeks. I had been following it around the yard, waiting for the right moment, hoping to get that perfect shot. But it was just too elusive. The squirrel was always one step ahead of me. It would scamper up the tree, out of my reach, and disappear. I vowed to keep trying. I would not give up. I would not let the squirrel slip away without a photograph. I would capture the essence of this little creature, this symbol of nature's charm, and make it my own. I would make it a memory that would last a lifetime. I would not let the squirrel defeat me. I would not let it get away without a photo. I would capture it, I would make it mine, I would make it real. I would capture the squirrel, I would make it a photograph, I would make it a memory, I would make it a piece of art, I would make it a part of me.

Leon Dominy spends 16 years as camp ranger

By Dade Maxon

The retirement of Leon Dominy, who has spent 16 years as a camp ranger at Camp Pirtle, marks the end of an era for both the camp and its guests. Dominy, who has been a fixture at the camp for nearly two decades, is stepping down from his role after a successful career that has seen him oversee the well-being of hundreds of young boys and their families.

Dominy's tenure at Camp Pirtle began in 1986, when he was hired to work as a counselor at the camp. He quickly rose through the ranks, becoming a counselor-in-charge and then the head of the camp's activities. In 2000, he was named camp ranger, a position he has held ever since.

Although Dominy's departure marks the end of an era for the camp, it also brings new opportunities for the next generation of campers. "Leon has been a great leader and mentor to so many young people," said the camp's director, John Smith. "He's going to be deeply missed, but we're looking forward to seeing what the future holds for Camp Pirtle."
