Mishap claims Commissioner Brooks

John M. Brooks, Precinct 1 Commissioner, claims that a misfortune befell him over the weekend. Brooks said that he was at the fairgrounds on Friday night when a tractor overturned. He was not seriously injured but did suffer from a minor injury to his leg.

The incident occurred during a demonstration of agricultural equipment. Brooks was riding in the cab of the tractor when it began to tip over. He was able to quickly exit the cab before it flipped over. The tractor was later examined and found to have a mechanical failure that caused it to overturn.

Brooks has been alongtime supporter of the fairgrounds and has worked to improve the facilities. He said that he is grateful for the quick thinking of the fairgrounds staff who were able to respond quickly to the situation.

Student totals grow in Carthage schools

Legal battle developing over mineral valuation

By Mike Kelly

A legal battle is developing over the rights to minerals on state-owned land in the Panola County area.

Attorneys for the state and the Panola County Land Board have been discussing the issue for the past few months, and both sides are expected to file motions in court soon. The land, located near the town of Carthage, is believed to contain valuable minerals, including coal and natural gas.

The land was acquired by the state of Texas in the early 1900s, and it has been managed by the Panola County Land Board since then. The board is responsible for leasing the land for mineral rights and ensuring that the proceeds are used for the benefit of the county.

However, the state and the land board are now in disagreement over the valuation of the minerals on the land. The state believes that the minerals are worth millions of dollars, while the land board says the value is much lower.

The legal battle could have significant implications for the county and the state. If the state wins, it could receive millions of dollars from the minerals on the land. If the land board wins, it could retain control of the land and continue to manage it for the benefit of the county.
