Editorial:

Bringing out issues paper's responsibility

One of the news media's primary responsibilities is to provide a platform for the open and free expression of ideas, opinions, and perspectives. However, such an atmosphere of inclusion and diversity can sometimes be challenging to create, especially when addressing controversial topics. While it's important to present a range of views and allow for differing opinions, newspapers must also uphold certain standards of responsible journalism. These standards include accuracy, fairness, and the provision of context to help readers understand complex issues.

One way newspapers can demonstrate their commitment to responsible journalism is by ensuring that the perspectives they present are well-rounded and balanced. It's crucial to respect the right to free speech, but it's equally important to recognize that everyone does not have equal access to platforms where their voices can be heard. Therefore, newspapers must be diligent in their efforts to provide a space for underrepresented voices, ensuring that diverse viewpoints are included in their content.

In conclusion, newspapers hold a unique position in society as conduits of information and opinion. They have a responsibility to uphold the highest standards of journalism by providing a platform for all voices, especially those that may be marginalized or silenced. By doing so, they can help foster a more informed and engaged public, contributing to a healthier democracy.

THEN . . .
IT'S TOO LATE

Why is it?
A man wakes up in the morning after sleeping on an advertised bed, in advertised pajamas. He will bathe in an advertised tub, wash with advertised soap, shave with an advertised razor, have a breakfast of advertised juice, cereal and toast (toasted in an advertised toaster), put on advertised clothes and glance at his advertised watch.

He will ride to work in an advertised car, sit at an advertised desk, smoke advertised cigars and write with an advertised pen.

Yet this man hesitates to advertise, saying that advertising does not pay.

Finally, when his unadvertised business goes under, he will advertise it for sale.
