I don't care where it is, just don't ask me anymore

Talking about the Persians, anyway...

There are still a lot of details that need to be worked out, but I don't want to get into them just yet. All we know is that we're going to have a big celebration on the 20th of next month. It's going to be a gala event, with music, food, and fun for everyone. We're also planning some other activities, like a parade and a picnic, but we haven't decided on all the specifics yet. The main thing is that we're excited and can't wait to see everyone there.

The Persians have been a part of our history for centuries, and we want to make sure everyone knows and appreciates their contributions. This celebration is a great opportunity to come together and celebrate our common heritage.

Palaver over political expenditures boggles you

There's been a lot of political expenditures in this election cycle, and it's a little confusing. But one thing is clear: the money is flowing. And it's not just the candidates, it's also the PACs and super PACs. It's a pretty messy situation, to say the least.

Treasurer of the Texas Democratic Party, Tomás Jiménez, said, "The process is not transparent enough. We need more regulation to prevent corruption."

The conversation with D. T. Wheeler started with the question, "What can be done to combat political expenditures in elections?"

The treasurer responded, "We need to increase transparency and accountability. We need to require candidates to disclose their donors and expenditures. This will help prevent corruption and ensure fair elections.

Incinerator study poses new concerns for officials

A study of the proposed incinerator in Corpus Christi has raised new concerns for city officials. The study, conducted by Environmental Impact Assessments, Inc., found that the facility would emit more pollutants than previously thought.

The study was commissioned by the city of Corpus Christi as part of the public hearing process. It was conducted by Environmental Impact Assessments, Inc., and was released last week.

The study found that the incinerator would emit more nitrogen oxides, sulfur dioxide, and particulate matter than previously thought. The emissions would be highest during hot and humid weather.

City officials are reviewing the study and will make a decision on whether to proceed with the incinerator project. A public hearing is scheduled for next month.
