The idea was accepted by a few but support was too low to make it a reality.

Local broadcaster meets with Reagan

By Dick Doran

A recent national broadcast covering the American Revolution was the last film the late actor, Ronald Reagan, ever recorded. The broadcast, named "The Unfinished Revolution: The Battle of Saratoga," was a historically accurate film that depicted the pivotal moment in the American war for independence.

The film, which was directed by the renowned director, David L. Wolper, vividly depicted the events leading up to the battle of Saratoga and the crucial role played by General George Washington and his troops. The film also highlighted the significant contributions made by the small townspeople in supporting the revolution.

In the film, the townspeople were shown to be actively involved in supplying the troops with food, shelter, and medical care. This support was crucial in enabling the American forces to win the battle of Saratoga, which helped to turn the tide of the war in favor of the colonies.

The film was produced by the American Revolution Bicentennial Authority and aired on the American Broadcasting Company (ABC) network. It received widespread praise for its accurate portrayal of the events of the American Revolution and its role in educating the public about the importance of the battle of Saratoga.

As a member of the National Board of Review, Dr. George Beek of the Panola County Post was authorized to attend the film's national broadcast. The film was screened in the Panola County Post's main office, and Dr. Beek and his wife, Joyce Anne Brown, were among the attendees.

As a result of attending the broadcast, Dr. Beek and Joyce Anne Brown were able to gain a deeper understanding of the significance of the battle of Saratoga and its impact on the American Revolution. They appreciated the film's ability to bring to life the story of the revolution and its importance in shaping the future of the United States.

In conclusion, "The Unfinished Revolution: The Battle of Saratoga" is a remarkable film that accurately depicts the events of the American Revolution and the role played by the small townspeople in supporting the cause. The film is a testament to the enduring legacy of the American Revolution and the importance of remembering the sacrifices made by the revolutionaries who fought for freedom and independence.

City okays bid on animal control program

By Bert Clunch

City officials have approved a bid Monday night with Waterfront Kennels, Abbeville, for a new animal control program and facilities at a cost of $3,499.27.

On June 1, the city received the sealed bids from several companies, and on Monday night, the bid was presented to the city council for approval.

According to the staff report, the new facility will be located on the east side of the city and will include a humane trap, a shelter building, and a kennel area.

The new facility will be used to trap and control the animal population in the city, reducing the number of stray animals and improving the quality of life for residents.

The council approved the bid unanimously, stating that the facility will be a significant improvement over the current animal control program.

The new facility is expected to begin operations in the next several months, with the first animals being trapped and controlled in the coming weeks.
