Tatum News

Galloway News

This has been a busy week for the city of Tatum. The mayor has announced that the city will be hosting a new festival next month. The festival will include live music, food trucks, and a parade. The mayor has also said that the city is looking into building a new park in the area. The city council will discuss the plans at their next meeting.

The police department has been busy, as well. They have arrested three people for theft at the local grocery store. The suspects were caught on surveillance video and are believed to have stolen over $500 in goods. The police are still looking for more information and are asking anyone with information to come forward.

Soil testing importance outlined

This fall, the local agricultural extension service is offering soil testing for free. The tests will help farmers determine the health of their soil and how to improve it. The tests can be ordered online and picked up at the extension office. The deadline for ordering is October 15th. The tests will be returned within two weeks.
