Carthage begins push for late tax collections

By Darrell Charles

Carthage city manager and city tax collector started a push Monday for late tax collection. The city will offer a 10% reduction on any tax due and paid by the 25th of September. The offer is available for both water and sewer utilities. City Manager Charles Purvis said the reduction is to encourage residents to pay their taxes on time. He added that the city's budget depends on timely collections. A public notice was published in the Carthage News to inform residents of the offer. A public hearing on the matter is scheduled for the 15th of this month.

All county taxes are increased

By Mary Smith

A majority of the county's tax rates have been increased. The increase is due to a state mandate to fund education. The tax rate for the school district has increased by 1.5 mills. The county tax rate has increased by 0.5 mills. The new rates will take effect on the next tax rolls.

Two shootings reported

By John Johnson

Two shootings were reported in Carthage this past weekend. The first incident occurred on Saturday evening in the downtown area. The incident involved a dispute over a parking space. It is unclear at this time if the suspect was arrested. The second incident occurred on Sunday morning in the southside neighborhood. The suspect fled the scene and is still at large. The Carthage Police Department is investigating both cases.

Carthage on Champs- Elysees

The Carthage High School Quiz Bowl team qualified for the state tournament. The team will travel to Austin to compete next week. The team has been practicing extensively for this event. Coach Mike Johnson said his team is ready to take on the challenge.

Honesty deserves credit

The Carthage Junior High School student council donated $3,000 to the Panola County Hospital Foundation. The money was raised through a charity concert held in the school's auditorium. The student council is receiving recognition for their generosity. The hospital foundation is grateful for the support.

Texas education board chairman resigns

Texas education board chairman resigns

By Lewis Williams
The Texas education board chairman resigned this week after the state's legislative leaders agreed to oust him last week by imposing a 24-hour cooling off period. The resignation comes after the chairman was accused of improperly using state funds to influence legislation.

The chairman, who has been a key figure in the state's education policy, was accused of using state funds to pay for a private jet to fly him to meetings with legislators. The jet was paid for with state funds, and the chairman was later accused of using state funds to pay for his personal travel.

The legislative leaders agreed to the resignation last week, and the chairman submitted his resignation letter on Monday. The resignation will take effect immediately.

City officials push collection of delinquent taxes

City officials are pushing for the collection of delinquent taxes in the city. The city has been struggling to collect delinquent taxes for several years, and officials are optimistic that this push will help to address the problem.

The city has a delinquent tax rate of 7%, which is higher than the state average. Cities are allowed to charge an additional 4% in delinquent tax fees, and the city has been able to collect this fee.

The city has also been working with the state to develop a new system for collecting delinquent taxes. The new system will allow the city to collect taxes more efficiently and will help to increase the amount of money collected.

Trolley cars only way to travel

The Galveston car company is looking for a new way to travel. They have been considering using trolley cars as a means of transportation, and they are currently working on a prototype.

The company has been in business for several years, and they are looking for a new way to stay competitive. They have been considering several options, and they believe that trolley cars could be a viable alternative.

The company has been in talks with several cities, and they are currently working on a prototype. They believe that this could be a viable option for several cities, and they are looking for a partner to help with the development.

Bugs $10 reported
The bugs are reported to be on the rise in the area. The insects are affecting crops and gardens, and farmers are being forced to take action.

The bugs have been a problem for several years, and they are expected to continue to be a problem in the future. Farmers are being forced to use pesticides to control the bugs, and they are also using other methods to help keep the bugs at bay.

The bugs are a problem for both farmers and gardeners, and they are working together to find solutions. Farmers are using different methods to control the bugs, and they are also using pesticides to help control the insects.

Forage deterioration blamed on weather
The deterioration of forage grasses is a serious problem in our area. The main causes are excessive rainfall and high temperatures which cause high wind and steep wind. High winds can cause significant injury to the grasses. The grasses need longer growing periods to repair themselves, which can be caused by the rain. Sometimes, the grasses need to be watered or placed in a higher, more protected area for protection. Watering the grasses in a higher area will help them to grow faster and recover from the rain. Grasses that need additional care include those that have been watered or placed in a higher area. Grasses that need additional care can be placed in a lower area for protection. Grasses that need additional care can also be placed in a lower area for protection.
