Local parents cope with loss of son

SIDS: A mysterious killer

By Tanni Dammann

The parents of a 6-month-old baby who was found dead in her crib last week at their home in Circleville are struggling to cope with the sudden loss. The baby, who was born premature and had been treated for respiratory problems at birth, was found dead in her crib on September 11th. The parents, who have three other children, said they were shocked and devastated by the unexpected death.

The baby was born at 26 weeks gestation and had been treated for respiratory problems at birth. She was discharged from the hospital after two weeks but had been visited by a home health nurse several times before her death. The parents said they were confident that their baby was getting the care she needed.

The death has been ruled a case of SIDS (Sudden Infant Death Syndrome), which is a leading cause of death in infants under the age of one. SIDS is characterized by a sudden, unexpected death of a seemingly healthy infant, usually during sleep. Medical experts have not been able to determine the exact cause of SIDS, although they believe it may be related to a combination of genetic, environmental, and social factors.

As part of the grieving process, the parents have been reaching out to other parents who have lost a baby to SIDS. They have joined a support group and have been attending counseling sessions.

In the meantime, the parents are trying to find ways to honor their baby's memory. They have set up a memorial in their home and have been distributing information about SIDS to other parents in their community.

The parents said they hope that sharing their story will help others understand the pain of losing a child and will encourage them to seek help and support when they need it.

...God has chosen the most beautiful child to be with him... in the ultimate destination.

Cost, who had been working on the case, said he was unable to be reached for comment.

His brother, Ben Cost, 30, who also works for the sheriff's office, said his brother was a dedicated public servant who loved his job.

The family is mourning the loss of their son and is grateful for the support they have received from the community.

The sheriff's office has launched an investigation into the death, but has not released any further details.

In June, a 6-month-old baby was found dead in a dumpster in the same area. The death is being investigated as a case of SIDS.

This has been the second SIDS death in Circleville in the past month.
