Federal, state 'Hand-me-downs':

Local taxpayers will bear cost

By Earl Chipcy

After being informed that federal and state governments are passing down a few "hand-me-downs" to local governments, Van Buren County Judge Charles Ross has told county residents to brace themselves for hefty tax increases.

"We need to tell local taxpayers to expect higher property taxes," said Ross. "Our county budget is in the red and we're getting a big chunk of money from Washington to help us stay afloat."

According to Ross, this 'hand-me-down' from the federal government is a result of the recent tax cuts passed by Congress. "The government is cutting back on its spending and that's hitting local governments like our county," he said.

As a result of this federal cutback, Ross said, "We're going to have to pass on the costs to our citizens. Those tax cuts mean less revenue for the government, and that means less money for things like schools and roads."

The state 'hand-me-down' is not as well understood. However, Ross said, "It's a result of the state's budget issues. They're cutting back on social services, which means less money for things like education and healthcare."

"We're just going to have to absorb these costs," he said. "It's not fair, but we don't have a choice."

Ross added that the administration of justice will remain a priority, and some budget cuts may be necessary to balance the books. "We're going to have to make some tough decisions," he said. "But we'll do our best to keep the tax increases to a minimum."
