Problems faced by CISD nurses vary

Problems faced by CISD nurses vary, but one common issue is the high turnover rate among nurses. Many nurses leave the district due to the demanding nature of the job and the lack of support from administrators. Some nurses also feel overwhelmed by the volume of patients they are responsible for.

Another issue is the lack of resources, such as supplies and equipment, which can affect the quality of care provided to patients. Nurses often have to improvise and use their own resources to provide care, which can be stressful.

There is also a need for better communication between nurses and administrators. Nurses often have to make decisions without proper guidance or support, which can lead to errors or dissatisfaction.

Despite these challenges, many nurses in the district are dedicated to their work and continue to provide quality care to patients. The district is working to address these issues and improve the working conditions for nurses.
