Local teachers not addicted to White

By Mary Leigh Bert

I am concerned about the high number of teachers who are addicted to White. I believe it is a serious problem and we need to do something about it. I have spoken to several teachers and they agree that this is a problem. They also believe that we need to work together to find a solution. List of 'hunger counties' not really accurate

By Jim Miller

Texas pride is shown in many ways, one of which is the list of "hunger counties" in the state. This might cause some confusion, however, because a "hunger county" does not necessarily mean that people are hungry there. The term is used to describe an area where the population density is high enough to create a "hunger" situation. It is important to note that this does not mean that people are actually hungry, but rather that the area is unable to support a large population without the need for external assistance.

The list of "hunger counties" is based on a formula that takes into account the number of people in an area and the amount of resources available to them. It is intended to help officials identify areas where there may be a need for additional support services.

Texas leads nation in school debt

The two efforts by the Caruthers Independent School District to increase teacher pay and reduce debt have been praised by educators and parents. The district has reported significant savings in recent years, leading to increased student performance and better teacher retention rates.

The superintendent of the Caruthers Independent School District, Dr. Marjorie Tipton, has implemented a number of initiatives aimed at improving the district's financial situation. These include cuts in administration and a focus on increasing enrollment.

The district has also made efforts to reduce debt, including the sale of assets such as school buildings. In 2019, the district sold several properties for over $50 million, resulting in a $25 million reduction in debt.

Renewing a resource

December through March of each year is always a busy time for the Texas Panhandle farming families. County Extension Director Joseph Hinkle says that Panhandle farmers can look forward to an improved tobacco crop this year. The average rainfall in the area has been adequate for the crop's growth, and the crop is expected to be of better quality than in previous years.

Hinkle recommends that farmers follow the recommended planting dates and practices to ensure a successful crop. He also advises farmers to monitor the crop's progress and make necessary adjustments to the planting schedule if needed.

The panhandle is a region known for its diverse agriculture, and tobacco is just one of the many crops grown in the area. Other common crops include cotton, wheat, and sorghum, which are all important to the local economy.

In conclusion, the tobacco crop in the Panhandle is expected to be of high quality this year, thanks to adequate rainfall and proper cultivation practices. Farmers are encouraged to continue following the recommended practices to ensure a successful crop.
