PJC finds winning can be fun thing

Beat Angelina, 76-69

A Lady Pigstix vs. a Lady Angelina Conference game at the Moody Coliseum just might have been the biggest game ever played in the Panhandle. After two long seasons and two years of financial hardships, the two teams met in a sellout of the Moody Coliseum, which could also prove to be the biggest crowd ever to watch a basketball game in the Panhandle.

The Lady Angelina had not played well in recent games, losing seven of their last eight. They were not expected to do well against the Lady Pigstix, who had won their last three games.

The Lady Angelina had the lead for most of the game, but the Lady Pigstix were not giving up. They kept fighting back, but in the end, the Lady Pigstix emerged victorious, winning 76-69.

Crawford receives major NOAA Award

The New York City Board of Education has awarded the Robert J. Crawford School of Environmental Science and Technology a $1 million grant from the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) to support the school's innovative green science curriculum.

Crawford had been selected for the award because of his leadership in promoting environmental education and his commitment to developing the next generation of environmental scientists. The grant will be used to support the school's new Green Science Lab, which will provide students with hands-on experience in environmental science and technology.

The lab will feature state-of-the-art equipment and software, as well as a team of experienced scientists and educators who will guide students through the latest research and technologies in environmental science.

In addition to the lab, the grant will also support the expansion of the school's green science curriculum, which includes courses on climate change, renewable energy, and sustainable agriculture.

The award is part of NOAA's plan to increase the number of students pursuing careers in environmental science and technology. Crawford has been a strong advocate for this initiative and has worked tirelessly to promote environmental education in New York City.

Reflections on scouting's 75th year

In the early 20th century, scouting was established as a movement to provide young men and women with a structured program for physical and moral development. This period was marked by the emergence of key leaders who helped shape the organization's ethos.

One of the most significant figures in the early years of scouting was Lord Robert Baden-Powell, who founded the movement in 1907. Baden-Powell was inspired by a training exercise he conducted with his army officers and saw the potential for a similar program for boys and girls. He established the Boy Scouts of America in 1910, and the organization quickly spread across the United States.

The early years were marked by rapid growth, with thousands of new members joining each year. The organization was structured around a system of merit badges, which encouraged young people to develop their skills and knowledge in a variety of areas.

As the movement grew, it faced challenges and controversies. Some criticized the organization for its emphasis on discipline and patriotism, while others highlighted its positive impact on the personal development of young people.

Despite these challenges, scouting continued to evolve and adapt to meet the needs of its members. The organization expanded its programs to include girls, and it introduced new activities and opportunities for leadership.

Today, scouting continues to provide young people with a supportive environment for personal growth and development. It remains a vital part of the fabric of many communities, offering a platform for young people to learn important life skills and develop a sense of responsibility and citizenship.

Celebrating 75 years of scouting is an opportunity to reflect on the organization's contributions to society and to recognize the impact it has had on the lives of countless young people. As we look to the future, it is a reminder of the enduring value of scouting and its potential to inspire and empower the next generation.
