Youngster questions involvement

By Jane Brown

It seems that the youngster questions involvement in the affairs of the country. He wants to know why the government doesn't do more about the problems that we face today. He wonders if the government is using its power wisely and effectively.

In response, I would say that the government is indeed doing its best to address the issues that confront us. However, it is difficult to please everyone, and there are always disagreements and debates about how to proceed.

The youngster is right in wanting to be informed about the decisions that are made regarding the country. It is important for citizens to stay engaged and involved in the political process. By doing so, they can ensure that their voices are heard and that the decisions made reflect their values and priorities.

Services for seniors are sometimes frauds

By Jim Smith

Many businesses are offering services to seniors, such as financial planning and health care advice. Unfortunately, some of these services are fraudulent.

Some of the common frauds include overcharging for services, providing false information, or even convincing seniors to invest in risky ventures.

It is important for seniors to be aware of these scams and to exercise caution when considering any business or service provider.

Letter to the editor

President Reagan has portrayed himself as a champion of the elderly. However, many seniors feel that they are not receiving the support and resources they need.

In particular, I would like to address the issue of Medicare. Despite the numerous promises made by the administration, many seniors have difficulties accessing the necessary medical care.

I would urge the administration to take a more active role in ensuring that seniors have access to quality health care.

Theo Dyer, Angela Dyer

If we had to choose a set of rules for the way we lived our lives, the rules set by the greats in school would be the best. These rules are simple: be kind, be honest, and be hardworking. By following these rules, we can live a successful and fulfilling life.
