Days Gone By

By Ann Morris

Nick Callaway had a modern version of the ancient Greek tradition of having a box of ashes near the door to his 1938 Athol house. It seemed the only way to avoid the temptation of smoking at home. This was before the days of electronic cigarettes. Callaway's ashes were not for burial, however. They were for use in making soap. He collected them in a box, which he kept near the door, and used them in a soap-making process that he invented. The ashes were mixed with lye and water to create a lather, which was then used to clean dishes and other household items. Callaway's soap-making process was so successful that he was able to sell his soap to several local stores.

Panola residents have treasure waiting

Norton F. Taylor, publisher of the Centre Bulletin, recently published an article about the treasure of the town of Panola. Norton F. Taylor, along with his team of researchers, discovered a long-lost chest containing valuable artifacts and jewels. The chest was found in the basement of the Panola Masonic Lodge, which was built in the late 1800s. The chest was originally owned by the founder of Panola, who was a wealthy businessman and a member of the Masonic Lodge.

The chest contains a variety of items, including gold and silver coins, jewelry, and other artifacts. Some of the items are believed to be from the time of the Spanish conquest of Mexico. The chest also contains a diary written by a Spanish soldier who was stationed in the area.

The discovery has created a great deal of excitement in Panola, and local residents are eager to see the artifacts on display. The chest is currently being stored in a secure location, and plans are being made to display it in a local museum.
