As the clowns staggered into the gymnasium, a thrill of anticipation mounted in the air. The audience, consisting of children and adults, waited with bated breath for the performance to begin. Suddenly, the gymnasium erupted into a burst of cheers as the clowns took their places and began their act.

The clowns were energetic and hilarious, their costumes adding to the excitement of the performance. They performed a variety of routines, from juggling to magic tricks, each one more entertaining than the last. The audience laughed and shouted with delight as they watched the clowns antics.

"I love these clowns," said one parent. "Their creativity and energy are infectious and really bring joy to the children's faces."

The clowns were not only entertaining, but they also had a message to convey. "We want to teach children the importance of teamwork and perseverance," said one clown. "Through our routines, we hope to inspire them to always be their best selves and never give up."

As the clowns' performance came to an end, the audience erupted into applause. The clowns bowed and the audience gave them a standing ovation, a testament to the success of their performance.

"I wish we had more events like this," said one parent. "It's great to see the community come together and enjoy a fun event."

Late calves need to be prevented

Producers who are out of milk are faced with the possibility of losing the fall calves from the herd due to the high temperatures and humidity. According to Dr. Reid Wilson, a veterinarian from AgriLife Extension Service, there are several steps that producers can take to prevent late calves and ensure the health of their herd.

1. Temperature Management: High temperatures can cause stress on cows, leading to poor milk production and increased risk of ketosis. Ensure that cows have access to shade and water, especially during peak heat periods.
2. Hydration: Keep water sources clean and ensure that all cows have access to clean water.
3. Nutrition: Provide a balanced diet rich in easily digestible carbohydrates to help maintain body condition in hot weather.
4. Vaccination: Ensure that all cows are up to date with vaccinations to prevent diseases that can be exacerbated by heat stress.

Producers should monitor their herd for any signs of heat stress and take immediate action to prevent late calves. For more information, contact your local AgriLife Extension agent or visit the Texas Agriculture Extension Service website.

Foresters to examine SPB impact

The U.S. Forest Service has announced plans to examine the potential impact of the spotted bamboo beetles (SPB) on the forest ecosystem in the Northern States. The examination will include an assessment of the current population, potential spread, and possible consequences for forest health and biodiversity.

Texas political face could be reshaped

The recent Special Session of the Texas Legislature has reshaped the political landscape in the state. Key issues such as education, healthcare, and property tax reform have been on the table, and the outcomes will likely have a significant impact on the political climate for the upcoming election cycle.

Consumer update:

Texas hottest weather comes at summer's end

As the summer season winds down, the state of Texas experiences some of the hottest weather of the year. This is not uncommon for the state, as it is known for its hot summers. However, for some, the heat can be a challenge.

- Drink plenty of water: Staying hydrated is crucial during hot weather. Drink plenty of water throughout the day to prevent dehydration.
- Seek shade: When possible, look for shade to keep cool.
- Limit outdoor activities: Avoid strenuous activities during peak heat periods.
- Check on vulnerable populations: Keep an eye on the elderly, young children, and pets to ensure they are staying cool.

Growth implant can improve calf crop cost/return ratio

Growth implants have become a popular tool for improving calf performance and reducing management costs. These implants contain hormones that promote growth and improve feed efficiency, leading to increased weaning weights and better cost/return ratios. To get the most benefit from growth implants, producers should consider the following:

1. Hormone type: Choose the right hormone type based on the stage of growth and the desired outcome.
2. Application method: Implants can be placed under the skin, or as a subcutaneous injection. The method chosen will depend on the implant type and the producer's preference.
3. Monitoring and management: Regular monitoring of the implant's effectiveness is crucial to ensure optimal results.

For more information on growth implants and how they can improve calf crop cost/return ratios, contact your local extension agent or visit the Texas Department of Agriculture website.
