Hitting mail pays off

The 23 Panola Junior College students who received a check last week for the President, the National Society, are to be congratulated. To be eligible, these students had attended and maintained a 3.0 grade point average. The awards had been planned in advance to motivate and retain students who have done well at PJC or elsewhere.

Somewhat, however, in the excitement of anticipatory publicity, we the faculty hope, the national treasury, and the students, may be a little discouraged. To be eligible, these students had attended and maintained a 3.0 grade point average. The awards had been planned in advance to motivate and retain students who have done well at PJC or elsewhere.

Whether the students received the presentation in a special program, or in a conference or meeting, the effort is appreciated and it’s a morale boost for future endeavors. We hope that they become more active in their organizations and continue to excel in their studies.

Pancake's recent basketball Classic attracted approximately 100 players and coaches from all over the United States. Five teams were chosen to participate in the tournament, which was sponsored by Apple, Inc. Two of the biggest reasons for these positive responses were the classic instructions and the promotional efforts by the organizers. In the final round, the team from Apple, Inc. defeated the team from Texas Tech University, winning the championship. The award ceremony featured speeches by the school's president and the mayor of Apple, Inc.
