Urban cowboy chic is passe, says critic

When Texas went to town on hip for a nostalgic look at the classic cowboy. The urban cowboy went all the way to the roots of some great Texas towns, but on the wrong side.

One key player in the urban cowboy scene was a woman named Beulah Hornstone. She was known as the "Cowgirl Chic," and she was one of the main forces behind the trend. Hornstone was known for her cowboy boots, hats, and overall cowboy look. She even had a line of clothing that was inspired by the classic cowboy style.

The trend started in the 1970s and 1980s, with cowboy boots, hats, and shirts becoming popular among both men and women. The Urban Cowboy movement was seen in a lot of places, from the streets of New York City to the country roads of Texas. The trend was so popular that it even influenced fashion in other parts of the world.

But Hornstone's influence was limited to the urban cowboy scene. She didn't have much of an impact on the classic cowboy look, which was still very much alive in the West. The classic cowboy look was still popular among ranchers and farmers, and it was still part of the culture in many parts of the country.

Commodity foods to be given away

Preparations for a new school year are underway at Panola County schools. educators and staff are busy preparing for the fall semester, which begins in August. The school district is anticipating a strong enrollment this year, with a goal of accommodating all students who wish to attend.

Apple didn't enjoy it

Runners, refs pop PJC

BY TED LEACH

LUFKIN—Apple was the only one of the Panola High School basketball teams to win its district opener Friday night as the coach had the chance to work out his team with some success against theMeasurement of the quality of a team's performance in a basketball game. Apple didn't have much support from its fans or the referees when it played against the Panthers, but it had enough to pull off a 41-60 loss on Friday night. The team's defense was under pressure from the start, and Apple lost 15 of 16 first-half possessions. The coach was later asked how the team had held up during the game. He replied that he had been preparing the players for tough nights, and Apple had done its best to meet the challenge. He added that the team had practiced hard in the weeks leading up to the game, and that all the effort had paid off. The coach also acknowledged the referees' role in the game, stating that they had done their best to make the calls, but that Apple had to play better in the second half to have a chance. Speaking of the second half, the coach said that Apple had played better defensively and had taken more shots from the field, but that the team had not been able to capitalize on its opportunities. He concluded by saying that Apple would have to practice harder in the weeks leading up to the next game to become a better team.
