County will tackle 28 items

County soil eroding

Nearby 20 percent of the land in Panola County is highly erodible and 49 percent is potentially highly erodible, according to a 1993 release that work by the USDA Soil Conservation Service at a meeting of the Panola County Conservation District.

The conservation assessment procedures of the act derive from USDA farm benefit assessments and methodologies approved by the food security act of 1985. USDA officials said that agricultural practices such as terraces and contour farming would help to prevent soil erosion.

"We are ready to help anyone who wants to be involved," said a spokesperson for the Panola County Conservation District.

Oil, gas brings $305.9 million to local area

Although the oil and gas industry has benefited from depressed prices during the past ten years, Panola County has received $305.9 million in oil and gas income, according to local officials.

The amount, which includes $109.6 million in federal grants and $196.2 million in state grants, was released by the Panola County Economic Development Committee.

The committee said that the oil and gas industry has been a major contributor to the county's economy, and that its success has been attributed to the efforts of the Panola County Economic Development Committee.

County Judge4 Mike Parker administrates the oath of office to county officials before they assume duties for the new year.

County Judge Mike Parker, shown here with county clerk Artie Presser, was sworn in as the new county judge. Parker took the oath of office from Judge Clayton Parker, former county judge and Parker's brother.

County will tackle 28 items

The first public meeting of the county commissioners will be held on Jan. 4, 1987, to set the agenda for the new year.

The meeting will also be the first opportunity for the new county judge, Mike Parker, to address the county commissioners and the public.

Hey, it's the New Year; why not be frugal?

Newspapers, the business of marketing are always eager to drum up business with the promise of "new year, new you" or "new year, new me". The "new you" is often associated with a change in habits, a change in behavior, a change in attitude. But what about the "new you" in the world of marketing? Perhaps it's time to consider the idea of frugality in the New Year.

"Frugality" is defined as the practice of living a simple, disciplined, and economical lifestyle. It's about making choices that align with our values and what we care about. Frugality is not about living a life of deprivation, but rather about making the most of what we have.

In the world of marketing, the concept of frugality can be applied in a few different ways. For example, companies can focus on creating marketing campaigns that are less flashy, less expensive, but still effective. This could involve using social media to promote products, rather than traditional advertising. It could also involve creating content that is valuable and useful to the customer, rather than simply trying to sell something.

Another way that frugality can be applied in the world of marketing is to focus on building long-term relationships with customers. This could involve creating loyalty programs, or simply being more responsive to customer needs and concerns.

Overall, the concept of frugality is about making choices that are aligned with our values and what we care about. It's about living a simple, disciplined, and economical lifestyle. And in the world of marketing, it's about creating campaigns and strategies that are effective, but also aligned with our values and what we care about.

Don't flat earth folk and witches get equal time?

Recently, a U.S. district judge ruled in favor of the Flat Earth Society in a lawsuit challenging the federal government's decision to declare Earth as the third planet from the sun. The judge ruled that the government's decision was based on scientific evidence and did not violate the First Amendment's protection of free speech.

The Curious Reporter

A New Year’s Eve party at a local restaurant turned into a memorable experience for a group of friends. The evening started with cocktails and a live band, but things took an unexpected turn when a mysterious figure entered the venue. As the guests were enjoying the music and drinks, they noticed a man dressed in a black suit approach the stage. His face was covered with a mask, and he spoke in a deep, calm voice that sent shivers down their spines.

"Who are you? What do you want?" one of the guests asked courageously.

"I am the Curious Reporter," the figure replied. "I have come to document the events of this night, to share them with the world."

The crowd was amazed. They had never seen anything like this before. Some were afraid, others were curious, but everyone was captivated by the episode.

The figure continued to roam the restaurant, taking photos and making notes. As the night progressed, more and more people joined the party, eager to see what would happen next.

At midnight, the Curious Reporter announced the end of the night and thanked everyone for their participation. The guests were naturally disappointed, but they knew they would never forget the unforgettable experience they had just undergone.

The Curious Reporter disappeared into the night, leaving behind a puzzle that only time would solve. The guests went home, but they knew that the night they had just experienced would be etched in their memories forever.

County seeks sealed bids on five items

By Steve Heims

In his first meeting as county commissioner, Lee County Commissioner Mike Parker announced plans to advertise for sealed bids on five county-owned properties.

The properties include a 2,000-square-foot building on East Main Street, a 1,500-square-foot building on North Front Street, a 1,000-square-foot building on South Main Street, a 500-square-foot building on West Main Street, and a 200-square-foot building on South Front Street.

The advertised value of the properties ranges from $25,000 to $50,000, with the buildings on East Main Street and North Front Street valued at $40,000.

"We're looking to generate some additional income for the county," Parker said. "Sealed bids will allow us to get a fair price for these properties."

The deadline for bids is February 15, and the winning bidder will be announced at the next county commission meeting.
