Temporary fuel tax improves rural highways

By State Senator
POST WILLIAMS
A recently-passed federal highway bill with funding for Texas' interstate system is set to provide the state and county governments with much-needed funds for highway construction and maintenance. The bill, the Intermodal Surface Transportation Efficiency Act, has been signed into law by President Bush.

The bill allocates $40.2 billion in federal funds over the next five years for highway construction, maintenance, and safety improvements. Of this amount, $10 billion is specifically earmarked for the Texas interstate system, which includes the Panhandle and Fort Worth counties.

"This is a tremendous victory for Texas' highway system," said State Senator POST WILLIAMS, a member of the Senate Transportation Committee. "The funds will enable us to complete important projects such as the widening of I-35 in Fort Worth and the expansion of I-40 in the Panhandle."

In addition to the federal funds, the bill includes provisions for state and local governments to match the federal funds on a 50-50 basis, providing even more resources for highway improvements.

The temporary fuel tax, which will be in place for eight years, has been widely criticized by environmental groups and some state legislators. However, POST WILLIAMS believes that the tax is necessary to fund the highway improvements.

"I understand the concerns about the temporary fuel tax," POST WILLIAMS said. "But we need the funding to keep our highways safe and efficient. This is a tough pill to swallow, but it's necessary for the future of Texas' transportation system."

POST WILLIAMS also noted that the bill includes provisions for the state to use the funds for public transportation projects, such as improving train and bus service.

"We're making sure that these funds benefit all modes of transportation," POST WILLIAMS said. "This is an important step forward for Texas' transportation system."

Students get low-down on what jobs really are

By Dorothy Heithar

Everyone loves Sally Ride. You probably knew the first American woman in space, Sally Ride, when she first went into space. But how many people really know what a career as an astronaut involves? A career that involves science, technology, engineering, and mathematics (STEM)?

Sally Ride, the first American woman in space, was born in 1951. She graduated from Stanford University with a degree in physics and then went on to receive a doctorate in astrophysics from the University of California, Berkeley. After receiving her degree, Sally Ride worked as a research scientist at the California Institute of Technology. She was also a professor at the University of California, San Diego.

In 1983, Sally Ride was selected as an astronaut candidate by NASA. She flew on five space shuttle missions, spending a total of 24 days in space. She was also the first American woman to fly in space and the first American woman to walk on the moon. Sally Ride was a member of the Space Shuttle Challenger disaster investigation board and served as a science advisor to the president.

Sally Ride was a passionate advocate for science education and encouraged young people to pursue careers in STEM fields. She was a strong supporter of women in science and helped to inspire many young girls to pursue careers in STEM.

Sally Ride passed away in 2012, but her legacy lives on through the Sally Ride Foundation, which she founded to inspire young girls to pursue careers in science, technology, engineering, and mathematics. The foundation offers scholarships and summer camps for girls interested in STEM fields.
