Weekly ag update

By Tom Gaskins
Farmers in a few areas report finding slender worms in their soil. These worms, also known as root maggots, can be a problem for many crops, including tomatoes, cucumbers, and potatoes. To control them, farmers should consider using soil amendments, such as compost, to improve soil health and reduce the incidence of root worms. Farmers can also use biological controls, such as nematodes, to help manage root worm infestations. One of the most used tools in the battle for root worm control is a rootworm detector. Use of this tool can help farmers determine the severity of the infestation and select the appropriate control method. Farmers should also consider rotating crops to help control root worms.

Older folks need better nutrition

By James R. Kinnon

County Extension Agent for Home Economics for the 35 counties in East Texas.

Many older adults are malnourished. They don't eat enough of the right kind of food. This can result in serious health problems. Poor nutrition can cause several problems such as weight loss, anemia, and weak bones.

To ensure that older adults get the nutrition they need, it's important to plan meals for them that include plenty of fruits and vegetables, whole grains, lean protein, and low-fat dairy products. It's also important to make sure they have safe and accessible places to store and prepare food.

Encourage older adults to talk to their healthcare provider about their dietary needs. They may need help with meal planning or preparing meals. It's also a good idea to ask family members or friends to help with cooking and meal preparation.
