Day by day – The Constitutional Convention of 1787:

Week Four: Agreement reached on veto, judges

By Tim Glidden

The delegates to the Constitutional Convention reached an agreement on the issue of the veto power of the President and the appointment of Supreme Court justices.

The delegates had been debating the issue of the President's power to veto legislation passed by Congress. The question was whether the President should have the power to veto legislation, and if so, whether the President should have the power to override a veto with a two-thirds vote of both houses of Congress.

The delegates finally agreed on a compromise that would give the President the power to veto legislation, but would require a two-thirds vote of both houses of Congress to override a veto.

The delegates also debated the issue of the appointment of Supreme Court justices. The question was whether the President should have the power to appoint Supreme Court justices, and if so, whether the President should have the power to appoint Supreme Court justices for life.

The delegates finally agreed on a compromise that would give the President the power to appoint Supreme Court justices, but would require the Senate to confirm the President's appointments.

The delegates also debated the issue of the President's role in the executive branch. The question was whether the President should have the power to issue executive orders, and if so, whether the President should have the power to issue executive orders without the consent of Congress.

The delegates finally agreed on a compromise that would give the President the power to issue executive orders, but would require the President to report to Congress on the Executive Orders issued.

Letters to the editor:

Beckville residents voice personal concern

Dear Editor:

I am writing to voice my concern about the current state of our community. As a resident of Beckville, I have noticed a decrease in the quality of life for many of our citizens. The streets are becoming dirtier, and the sidewalks are uneven. The senior citizens and children in our community are particularly affected by these issues.

While I understand the financial constraints that our local government faces, I believe that more must be done to maintain the cleanliness and safety of our community. I urge the city council to consider implementing a program that would provide funding for the maintenance of our streets and sidewalks.

Sincerely,

Pregnant employees may return to job

Dear Commissioner Haver:

I am writing to request that you consider an exemption for pregnant employees under the Pregnancy Discrimination Act. I understand that the act provides for reasonable accommodations for pregnant employees, but I believe that there are cases where a temporary accommodation may be necessary.

For example, my company has a policy that requires employees to work on their feet for long periods of time. This policy may be impossible to enforce during pregnancy, and I believe that a temporary accommodation may be necessary.

I ask that you consider this request and provide guidance on how to handle these types of situations.

Sincerely,
