State lawmakers face budget deadline

By Carol Hyman, Houston Chronicle

Texas lawmakers are facing a budget deadline that could result in a government shutdown. If the state government runs out of money, it could force the closure of state offices and services. The deadline is set for the end of the month. The Texas House Appropriations Committee has been working to come up with a budget that meets the needs of the state while also addressing the concerns of taxpayers. The committee has held numerous hearings and has received input from various stakeholders, including state agencies and local governments. However, the committee has struggled to find common ground on key issues such as education funding and property tax relief. If a budget agreement cannot be reached, the state could face a fiscal crisis that would have far-reaching implications for the state’s economy and residents.

Deceptive advertising clouds contact lenses

By Tim Miller

Consumers interested in purchasing contact lenses may find themselves swayed by deceptive advertising. Companies may exaggerate the benefits of their products or downplay the potential side effects. It is important to do your research and read labels carefully before making a purchase. The Consumer Protection Bureau has issued guidelines to help consumers identify deceptive advertising practices. These guidelines include requiring companies to provide clear and accurate information about their products, including potential risks and side effects. Additionally, companies must not make claims that are not supported by scientific evidence. By following these guidelines, consumers can make more informed decisions about their purchases and avoid being swayed by deceptive advertising.

Cow culling increases profits

By Mark Bradfield

Farms are facing a dilemma: culling cows to increase profits. The practice of culling, or the intentional killing of animals, is controversial, but it is being used by some farmers to improve their bottom line. The culling process involves carefully selecting cows based on factors such as age, health, and productivity. The selected cows are then disposed of, either by being sold for meat or by being killed for their hides or other valuable parts. While culling can increase profits, it also raises ethical concerns about the treatment of animals. It is important for farmers to consider the impact of culling on their business and the welfare of the animals they raise.

Field trip devotion

Last week, a mother from our church called to inform me that her elderly father had passed away. She had previously asked if there was a way to honor her father in the church’s dedication service. I was able to arrange a trip to the local cemetery where she could place a wreath on his grave. This week’s devotion was held on the lawn in front of the church, where we celebrated the life of a beloved member of our community. The service was held in his honor, and many of the members of our church gathered to pay their respects. It was a beautiful and moving tribute to a man who had made such a positive impact on all of our lives.
