County may consider leasing hospital

Recruiting plans postponed

By Dave Hendrick

The board of managers of Pasco General Hospital Monday night approved a list of 25 qualifications for a new administrator most likely to fill the county commission's post next meeting. Following the commission's decision last month, County Judge Mike Parker said he was not interested in the job or was considering another position.

Commissioner Les Sproat said he also was not interested in the job and had been asked by the county's attorney to look into whether the county could take over the hospital from the county.

Several community members addressed the commission during the meeting, including the county's attorney, who said he had been asked by the county's attorney to look into whether the county could take over the hospital from the county.

East Texas economy expected to recover

Russell Model

East Texas can expect the next several years to be healthy. A number of factors are working in favor of economic stability. However, there are still some concerns.

The most significant factor is the ongoing growth in the oil and gas industry. The discovery of new oil fields has led to increased drilling activity, which has had a positive impact on employment and wages. Additionally, the development of infrastructure is creating jobs in the construction sector.

Another positive factor is the increased demand for manufactured goods. The expansion of the manufacturing sector has led to higher production levels and has helped to reduce unemployment rates.

Despite these positive trends, there are still some challenges. The high cost of living is still a concern, especially in rural areas. This has led to a migration of residents to other states where the cost of living is lower.

There is also concern over the impact of the pandemic on the tourism industry. The closure of businesses and travel restrictions has had a significant impact on the tourism sector.

Overall, the East Texas economy is expected to recover in the next few years. The ongoing growth in the oil and gas industry, coupled with the expansion of the manufacturing sector, is expected to create a positive environment for economic growth. However, the challenges of the pandemic and the high cost of living will continue to be areas of concern.
NIH's decision stuns Capitol press

By Howard Milewich

WASHINGTON – The National Institutes of Health (NIH) is facing criticism from some U.S. lawmakers for its recent decision to shut down a study on the potential benefits of a hormone therapy for Alzheimer's disease.

The announcement came a day after the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) announced it would stop funding a study on the same treatment.

NIH officials said the decision was based on new data showing that the hormone therapy did not significantly slow the progression of Alzheimer's disease.

"We made this decision based on the evidence," said Dr. Mark W. Stewart, director of the National Institute on Aging.

However, some lawmakers are concerned that the decision may have been rushed and that more research is needed.

"This is a major setback for Alzheimer's research," said Sen. John Barrasso, R-Wyo.

The NIH study, which was funded by the National Institute on Aging, was designed to test the effectiveness of a hormone therapy known as estradiol for delaying the onset of Alzheimer's disease.

The study enrolled about 1,000 women with early-stage Alzheimer's disease and randomized them to receive either estradiol or a placebo.

"We need to be cautious and not make any hasty decisions," said Rep. Cathy McMorris Rodgers, R-Wash.

The CDC study, which was funded by the National Institute on Aging, was designed to test the effectiveness of a hormone therapy known as testosterone for delaying the onset of Alzheimer's disease.

The study enrolled about 1,500 men with early-stage Alzheimer's disease and randomized them to receive either testosterone or a placebo.

"We need to carefully consider all the evidence before making a decision," said Rep. Tom Reed, R-N.Y.
FINANCIAL FOCUS

By Tom Goodwin

The stock market is in the midst of a rally as investors gain confidence in the economic recovery. The Dow Jones Industrial Average hit a new record high last week, and the S&P 500 and Nasdaq Composite indices also reached new highs. This is a positive sign for investors who have been skeptical of the economy's ability to recover.

While the economy is improving, there are still concerns about the future. The unemployment rate is still high, and the uncertainty about the impact of the pandemic on businesses is causing some hesitation. However, many economists believe that the economy will continue to grow in the coming months.

The Federal Reserve has been keeping interest rates low to stimulate economic growth. However, some are calling for the central bank to start tapering its stimulus program to prevent inflation from getting out of control.

Overall, the stock market appears to be in a strong position, but investors should be prepared for volatility in the coming months. It's important to stay informed about the economy and the policies that will affect it.

Feeding the Family

In this section, we will explore the question of how to feed our families while keeping costs low. We will look at ways to save money on groceries, as well as tips for meal planning and cooking on a budget.

We will also discuss the importance of nutrition and the role that food plays in our health. By making informed choices about what we eat, we can support our bodies and minds in their work.

Schools

Schools are back in session, and parents are busy getting their children ready for a new year of learning. This can be a stressful time, but there are steps you can take to make it easier.

One important step is to get organized. Make sure you have everything you need for your child's classes, including notebooks, pens, and any other supplies they might need.

Another important aspect of getting ready for school is nutrition. Make sure your child is eating a healthy breakfast and lunch each day.

Finally, don't forget to take care of yourself. The beginning of the school year can be a busy time, but it's important to take time for yourself to recharge.

DPS predicts

42 deaths

The Denver Public Schools (DPS) is warning parents of the dangers during the holiday season. The school district has seen a spike in deaths during the holiday season in recent years.

The majority of these deaths have been caused by motor vehicle accidents. However, there have also been cases of drownings, falls, and other accidents.

DPS is urging parents to be vigilant and take steps to keep their children safe during the holidays.
