'Original intent' debate rages on

By Thomas E. News

Editorial

A couple of months ago, the Court of Education ruled that the practice of the Constitution. We are not here to debate the wisdom of the Constitution, but to point out that the Court should be judicial, not political.

Chief Justice Burger and a majority of the Court have said the Constitution should be interpreted according to the "original intent" of the Founders. The Constitution, they say, speaks in terms that can be understood by all people, and that are not subject to the whims of Congress, the President, or the Court.

But the "original intent" theory has been criticized by many. It is said that the Constitution is a living document, and that its meaning can change over time. The "original intent" theory is also criticized for being subjective, and for ignoring the role of the Supreme Court in interpreting the Constitution.

The decision in the case at hand is important because it sets a precedent for future cases. If the Court holds that the "original intent" theory is the correct one, then it will be easier for the Court to justify its decisions. If the Court holds that the Constitution is a living document, then it will be harder for the Court to justify its decisions.

The "original intent" theory is not the only way to interpret the Constitution. There are other theories, such as the "living document" theory. The Court should be careful not to let the "original intent" theory become a substitute for the Constitution.

The decision in this case should be closely watched by those who care about the Constitution. The Constitution is a foundational document, and it is important that it be interpreted correctly.

Strength For Living

BY JERRY BURNAMAN

If it is a test of personality, of who you are, of what you believe in, of your values, one of the most important of all, it is the test of your ability to protect yourself and your loved ones from danger.

This is why I call it "Strength For Living." It is a question of whether you can stand up for what is right, whether you can stand up for what you believe in, whether you can stand up for your family.

For example, if you are in a situation where you have to choose between your personal safety and your family's safety, you have to choose between protecting yourself and protecting your loved ones.

This is why I say "Strength For Living." It is a question of whether you can stand up for what is right, whether you can stand up for what you believe in, whether you can stand up for your family.

It is a question of whether you can stand up for what is right, whether you can stand up for what you believe in, whether you can stand up for your family.

Parade draws large crowd

What may be a record crowd for the past decade of Pine Belt Christmas Parades gathered in downtown Carthage last Thursday afternoon for the annual Christmas Parade. The parade started at 4 pm and included floats, marching bands, and Santa Claus. The parade route was along Main Street, through the downtown area, and ended at the courthouse.

Parade participants included local businesses, schools, and community groups. The parade was sponsored by the Carthage Chamber of Commerce and the city of Carthage. The event was a great success and a fun way to kick off the holiday season.

Be careful during holidays

As the holiday season approaches, it is important to be aware of potential safety concerns. Here are some tips to keep you and your loved ones safe:

1. Secure your home: Make sure your doors and windows are locked, and consider installing a home security system.
2. Be cautious with holiday decorations: Avoid using flammable materials and keep your Christmas tree away from heat sources.
3. Be careful with cooking: Keep the stove and oven away from flammable materials and make sure your smoke detector is working.
4. Be cautious with fireworks: Follow all safety guidelines and avoid setting off fireworks indoors.

Shopping Parade successful

Christmas is the perfect time to shop locally! Support your local businesses by shopping in downtown Carthage. The annual Christmas shopping event takes place on December 12th and is a great opportunity to find unique gifts and support local businesses.

Event continues Thursday

The annual Christmas parade was a huge success, and the event continues Thursday with a community holiday celebration. The celebration includes live music, food, and games.
