Drunk driving a national tragedy

By Daniel H. Reed
Traffic Safety Administrator

Drunk driving has been identified as the major cause of traffic fatalities in the United States. In 1987, 19,000 people were killed in crashes involving a driver who had been drinking. This is an unacceptable number of deaths and it is essential that we take steps to reduce this tragic toll.

In recent years, there has been a significant increase in the number of fatalities caused by drunk driving. This is a serious problem that affects every community in the country. It is time for us to work together to address this issue.

We must take action to reduce drunk driving. This can be done through a combination of education, enforcement, and social change. We need to educate the public about the dangers of drunk driving and the importance of responsible driving.

Enforcement is also critical. We need to have strong laws in place that hold drunk drivers accountable for their actions. This can be done through increased funding for law enforcement and the courts.

Finally, we need to change the culture that surrounds drinking and driving. We need to make it clear that drunk driving is unacceptable and that we will not tolerate it.

We must take action to reduce drunk driving. It is a national tragedy that we can prevent. Let's work together to make our roads safer for all.

Advantages of flocked trees

For those who love the traditional look of a real tree, there are several advantages to flocked trees. First, they provide a more uniform appearance, which can be achieved with the use of flocking spray. Second, they are easier to maintain than real trees, as they do not require as much water or pruning. Third, they can be purchased at a lower cost than real trees, making them a more affordable option for those on a budget. Lastly, they can be kept up for longer periods of time, which means that they can be enjoyed for a longer duration.
