Dear Editor,

Recently, as the midnight hour was creeping on, I was suffering severe pain at San Antonio Main Hospital, in the Emergency Room. My wife and I were both there, struggling to cope with the relentless pain. We lived in our home in San Antonio, and were not looking for hospitalization, but rather, a quick diagnosis and treatment. We were told that our pain was caused by a severe case of appendicitis.

The pain was so severe that we were both unable to move. We were given pain medication, but it did not relieve the pain. Finally, after several hours, we were taken to the operating room, where we were both able to receive the necessary surgery. We are grateful for the care we received, but I am still in pain and on antibiotics.

Sincerely,

Thanks for help

On Tuesday morning, our parents arrived at our house in San Antonio. We had been expecting them to visit us, but when they arrived, we were both surprised to see them. They had driven all the way from Houston to visit us. We were so happy to see them, and we talked for hours about our recent experiences in Houston.

They had brought their car with them, and we were able to drive to a nearby McDonald's for a meal. We had not eaten McDonald's in years, so we were both excited to have a meal there. We talked about the food, and how much we had missed it.

Our parents had driven all the way from Houston, and we were both grateful to see them.

My dreams for a Maytag

On Thursday morning, I was sitting in the kitchen with my wife, discussing our plans for the weekend. We were both excited about the weekend, as we had planned a trip to Dallas to see the Maytag factory. We had always wanted to see the factory, and we were both looking forward to seeing it.

We talked about our dreams for the weekend, and how much we were looking forward to the trip. We talked about the factory, and how much we were looking forward to seeing it.

Dogs crush Mavs in opener by 10-0

BY TED LEACH
Monday, May 10, 1988

Dogs’ sophomore pitcher Lynette Tetrick had no idea what was going on at the mound on Monday night. The Dogs had just taken a 10-0 lead over the Mavs in the first inning, and she thought she might as well head to the dugout. But then she realized that she was needed on the field, and she went back to the mound to finish the game. The Dogs went on to win 13-0, and Tetrick pitched a complete game. The Dogs scored in every inning, including a grand slam in the third inning. The Mavs scored in the fourth inning, but could not overcome the deficit.

Merchant marines eligible for benefits

After 43 years and a federal court case or two, merchant marines who served in World War II who delivered supplies to the Soviet Union and were later detained by the former Eastern bloc countries may now be eligible for benefits they were denied for nearly 60 years.

A federal court order in April cleared the way for a new review of claims by thousands of merchant marines who were part of the lend-lease program that delivered supplies to the Soviet Union in World War II. The program, known as the Maritime Commission, was the largest government-owned shipbuilding program in American history.

An estimated 100,000 merchant marines served in World War II, and many of them were Compensation.

Merchant marines ineligible for benefits

Merchant marines who served in World War II were initially eligible for benefits under the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, which provided compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their service. However, the program was later canceled by the War Department in 1941, and merchant marines were denied benefits for the next 60 years.

In 2000, a federal law was passed that retroactively restored benefits to merchant marines who were part of the lend-lease program. However, thousands of merchant marines who served in World War II were not included in the program.

The new court order in April cleared the way for a new review of claims by merchant marines who were part of the lend-lease program. The order requires the government to review all claims and make a determination on eligibility.

In the meantime, merchant marines who served in World War II but were not part of the lend-lease program may still apply for benefits through the Veterans Administration.
