Landowners get pointers on leasing

By Howard Culberson

Approximately 50 landowners met with FSA representatives Friday afternoon to go over several factors that affect the leasing of land. The Landowners Association President, George White, opened the meeting and welcomed all in attendance. He stated that the purpose of this meeting was to help the landowner make a decision on the leasing of land and, if they lease, to help them better understand the process. The meeting was conducted in a relaxed manner and the attendees were encouraged to ask questions. The FSA representatives provided useful information about the leasing process and answered any questions that the landowners had. The meeting ended with a brief discussion about the future of the Landowners Association and plans for upcoming events. The attendees were then invited to the FSA office for a light lunch and to further discuss the leasing of land.

Financial planner profession emerges

The number of financial planners is growing, as more people become interested in this profession. A financial planner's primary role is to help individuals manage their finances, including saving, investing, and planning for retirement. Financial planners must be knowledgeable about various financial topics, such as taxes, insurance, and retirement, and be able to provide advice and guidance. They are typically hired by individuals or families, but may also work with businesses or institutions. The demand for financial planners is expected to grow in the coming years, as more people seek professional guidance to help manage their finances.

Governor Bill

Agony of the Genuinely Rich

Texas Governor Bill White is faced with the possibility of a sales tax increase if his proposed education plan is to be funded. The plan includes an increase in the state sales tax from 6% to 7%. White's proposal has encountered resistance from both the business community and the general public, who view the sales tax increase as a financial burden. However, White argues that the increased funding for education is essential for the state's future. The debate over the sales tax increase continues, as White and his supporters work to gain public support for their proposal.

Norwegian teen agers become friends in Panola County

Ice cream, friendships best part of Texas

By Dorothy Herlin

Norwegian teen agers have made friends in Panola County. They have discovered that ice cream and friendship are the best parts of Texas. The Aggers, a group of Netherlands-sproodle farm children, came to Texas last week for a visit. They stayed at the Wally Johnson home in Panola County. The Aggers are the children of Mr. and Mrs. Wally Johnson, who are well known in the Panola County area. They are inquisitive and friendly, and they enjoyed their stay in Texas. The Aggers have a love for ice cream, and they were delighted to find that ice cream is a popular treat in Texas. They spent much of their time enjoying the ice cream and the company of the Wally Johnson family.

Panola County Roots

By ROBBIE ELLISON

The Wally Johnson family is proud to announce the addition of their Norwegian teen agers to their household. The Aggers, who are visiting from the Netherlands, have been warmly welcomed into the family and have already become valued members of the Panola County community. The family is excited to share their unique culture and traditions with their new friends, and they look forward to many more memorable moments together.

Major USDA research project opens new possibilities

Appeal of home canning continues to grow

By Jeanette Mihalek

Canned foods are a part of our aging population's diet. The appeal of home canning continues to grow despite concerns about food safety and the increased availability of processed foods. This trend is partly due to the rising interest in local and organic foods, as well as the desire for homemade, healthy, and economically friendly meals.

One of the main benefits of home canning is the ability to preserve fresh produce for use throughout the year. This practice not only reduces waste but also allows individuals to enjoy seasonal produce year-round. Additionally, home-canned foods can be customized to meet specific dietary needs and preferences.

However, the success of home canning depends on proper equipment and techniques. In the following pages, we will discuss the essential equipment needed for canning success, as well as a selection of recipes for various types of canned goods.

Proper equipment essential to canning success, safety

The following sections outline proper equipment and techniques required for safe home canning. We will also address common concerns and misconceptions about canning.

1. Pressure Canner

A pressure canner is a vessel designed to create pressure inside, which is used to cook food at a higher temperature and pressure than is possible in a conventional kitchen setting. This allows for the sterilization of food, extending its shelf life.

2. Canning Lids and Bands

Canning lids and bands must be carefully chosen to ensure that they are compatible with the type of food being canned. It is important to use new lids each year and to check old bands for rust or damage.

3. Canning Pots

Canning pots are vessels used for boiling water or steam to heat food before canning. They are essential for creating an airtight seal in the canning process.

4. Funnel

A funnel is used to fill jars with hot food, preventing any trapped air from being introduced into the jar. This helps to ensure a proper seal.

5. Jar Leveller

A jar leveller helps to fill jars evenly with food, ensuring that the liquid level is correct and the headspace is consistent. This is crucial for achieving an airtight seal.

6. Jar Wrench

A jar wrench is used to close jars, applying the necessary pressure to create a seal.

7. Canninginnie

A canninginnie is a device used to remove air from jars before they are sealed. This helps to create an airtight seal, ensuring the food is properly preserved.

New, diverse canning possibilities opened by recent USDA research

Recent USDA research has opened up new possibilities for home canning. The agency has been working to develop hybrid varieties of fruits and vegetables that are particularly suited for canning. These new varieties offer improved taste, texture, and nutritional value, making them ideal for preservation.

For example, new strawberry varieties have been developed that are particularly well-suited for canning. These strawberries have a stronger flavor and firmer texture, which makes them ideal for jam, jelly, and other canned products. Similarly, new tomato varieties have been developed that are more resistant to blight and other diseases, allowing for better preservation.

In addition to these new varieties, the USDA has also developed new canning techniques that make it easier for home cooks to achieve proper preservation. These techniques include new methods for sterilizing jars and lids, as well as new approaches to boiling water and steam, ensuring that food is properly heated before canning.

Overall, the recent USDA research offers exciting new possibilities for home canning, providing home cooks with new and improved options for preserving fresh produce.
