One year later...

Tornado victims’ lives put whole

By Randy Young

More than a year has passed since the tornadoes that hit Galveston and Rockport communities. hardly anything seems normal, and it won’t. Today, looks just as the pick of the season, and the weather is much like it was before the storms. It seems that everyone is still coming to terms with the loss of homes and lives that were lost or damaged. The memories of that day will likely never fade.

In Galveston, the area has been hard hit, with many homes still under repair. People are trying to rebuild, but it’s a long process.

In Rockport, the same is true. The town is still recovering, and the damage from the tornadoes can still be seen.

There is still so much to do before things return to normal. I don’t know how normal will ever be again.

Mineral promoters from the former oil fields are again looking for new opportunities. The state has approved a new exploration permit and the drilling has begun. The sound of the boom can be heard all over the state.

The average family saves $400 a year with natural gas heating versus electric heat. And if you want to use even more, use natural gas for water heating, clothes drying and cooking. It all adds up.

So let the cold winds blow, you’ll be comfortable knowing you made the right energy choice.

West ignores humanities at own peril, panel warns

Panelists at the conference "The Future of the Humanities: The Role of the Humanities in the 21st Century" said that humanities education is vital to a well-rounded education and that the arts and humanities should not be ignored.

Chris Miller, a professor of English at Texas A&M University, said that the arts and humanities provide a foundation for critical thinking and problem-solving skills.

"The arts and humanities are essential to developing a well-rounded education," Miller said. "They provide a framework for understanding the world around us and help us develop empathy and compassion for others.

"If we ignore the humanities, we risk losing important aspects of our culture and history. It's crucial that we continue to support and invest in the arts and humanities," he added.

Strength For Living

BY JERRY BURMAN

With the advent of New Year, the days get shorter and the nights grow longer. It's a time when many people feel a bit down or depressed. But there are ways to combat the winter blues.

One effective strategy is to get outside and soak up as much sunlight as possible. Exposure to natural light helps regulate our body's circadian rhythm, which in turn affects our mood and energy levels. If you can't get enough sunlight outdoors, consider purchasing a light therapy box. These devices mimic sunlight and can help lift your spirits.

Another useful tip is to stay active. Regular exercise releases endorphins, chemicals in the brain that act as natural painkillers and mood elevators. Even a short walk or a few minutes of stretching can make a big difference.

Lastly, don't be afraid to reach out for help. If you're struggling with persistent feelings of sadness or hopelessness, speaking with a mental health professional can be an important step towards recovery.

The novel thrilled out Sunday afternoon. Momma had sent the kids to bed at 9 p.m. so she could watch "Little House on the Prairie" without interference. But the kids wouldn't let sleeping dogs lie, so they joined in on the excitement. We all dined out on Harper's hamburgers and watched the football game Monday night. We also watched the Santa Claus parade on Christmas Day. We got so used to the kids being at home all day that we were surprised when we had to go to work. We enjoyed our time with the kids and hope to have more kids in the future.
