All that remains of a once-standing bar and dance hall is a row of concrete and brick pillars. The pillars, now the only visible remnants of the structure, still stand on the corner of State and Sullivan streets. The bar, which was once a popular spot for local residents, was torn down several months ago by an anonymous developer.

The pillars were specifically designed for a bar and dance hall.

Trouble at A&M

The Texas A&M football program is looking at the "whip-sendarry" — the total destruction of the program for a year or longer. If the present charges are true — and that is not a small if — it could mean the end of A&M.

Former Apple High School student George Smith has told The Dallas Morning News that he has been kicking around the charges he made payments to after the student was put on a contract basis. It is said that the payments were made to his private account, to cover his living expenses. The student was expelled from the University, and the Student Association repaid him the amount of money he had paid while being paid by A&M. The student was not made aware of the payments until his expulsion. He did not know what had happened or why he was expelled.

The student is said to have been paying as much as $400 per week to his private account, which is estimated that Apple High School students pay $40 per week. The student said that he had paid a total of $800 per week to his private account, which is estimated that Apple High School students pay $40 per week.

A nation of Scrooges?

President-elect George Bush has promised a tax cut and lower interest rates, a place where private charity might help solve the problem of the poor and homeless. But are we being asked to do too much or too little? How can we help the poor and homeless? How can we help the poor and homeless?

Good intentions abound; so does poverty

In the presidential election last year, both parties pledged to help the poor and homeless. But are we being asked to do too much or too little? How can we help the poor and homeless? How can we help the poor and homeless?

‘Christmas in Carthage’ has more of everything

By Dorothy Morelia

‘Christmas in Carthage’ is back, and the audience is bigger than ever. The 7 p.m. show is regularly sold out, and the theater seating is tight, but somehow the audience is not overwhelmed. The reason? The show is a bit special.

In years past, a magical spirit of Christmas joy has filled Carthage and its surrounding areas. The show is called ‘Christmas in Carthage’ and has been a tradition for over 10 years.

The show has its roots in Easter Sunday, March 25, 1984, when Dorothy Morelia, a local artist, created a painting of a Christmas story. The painting was displayed at the Carthage Masonic Hall, and the audience was moved by the story and its message of hope and love.

Each year, Morelia’s painting is the centerpiece of the show, and the audience is drawn to its beauty and the message it conveys.

‘Christmas in Carthage’ has evolved from a simple story into a full-fledged show, complete with music, dance, and storytelling. The show is designed to bring the audience into the spirit of the holiday season, and it does just that.

‘Christmas in Carthage’ is not just about the story, though. It’s also about the people who come together to bring it to life. The cast and crew are dedicated to making the show a success, and they work tirelessly to make sure that every detail is just right.

‘Christmas in Carthage’ is a must-see for anyone who loves Christmas, and it’s a great way to get into the holiday spirit. See you there!
