Chapman gets committee nod

E. Texas clout increased

By Phil Martin
Lane Editor

In a rare show of unity, the East Texas delegation in Austin has agreed to speak as a bloc before the House Appropriations Committee.

On Tuesday, the delegation members met in the offices of Rep. Joe Hixon to discuss their priorities as they prepare to present the East Texas economic and development agenda.

"This is a testament to the power of unity," said Rep. Hixon. "We are strong individually, but together we are invincible."

Chapman added, "We have the potential to make a real difference in the state's budget and policies."

Kowalski enjoys Carthage hospitality

Barb Koelsch

It was a great pleasure to be in Carthage. I enjoyed the hospitality shown by the people. The city was clean and welcoming. The weather was perfect for a pleasant stroll around town.

Holiday shopping lamented

I have often wondered why people feel the need to shop so much during the holidays. It seems like the whole world is obsessed with buying gifts for others. Why not focus on spending time with family and friends instead of rushing around trying to find the perfect present?

By Maryann Clevel

A fever has been confirmed in horses at a local farm, causing concern among horse owners in the area.

The fever, known as "Swamp Fever," is a rare condition that affects horses and can be deadly if not treated promptly. Symptoms include fever, weakness, and sometimes death.

The local veterinarian, Dr. David Johnson, has been working with the affected horses and has recommended strict quarantine and isolation measures to prevent the spread of the disease.

Horse owners in the area are urged to monitor their horses for any signs of illness and to contact their veterinarian immediately if symptoms are observed.

Tradition valued at non-traditional school

By Dorothy Nelson

At Northside Christian Academy, 21 students from first through 12th grade attend in classes which are not the usual large room, unpinned by meals or recesses.

We're having a good year this year. I give the Lord the credit. —Billy Shoffner dividends. In this respect, the academy is reminiscent of the one schoolhouse that dotted the Texas countryside as recently as 50 years ago. Today, it is rarely another.

Children are taught by "pence" in each subject. It requires completing 12 papers per subject per year. They study at individual "work stations," and check their own work for accuracy.

The alternative education for children whose parents favor a strong evangelical Christian school to teaching — parents who are disillusioned with the secular bias of the public schools, and who want strong emphasis on the values and morals, and teachers that are generally viewed as "traditional." In one year, says the Rev. Billy Shoffner, pastor of Northside Christian Center, that for which the academy is chartered, the school is not a church, but an extension of the church. "As a school, we want to be the same group, "academic," says the Christian regular Bible study conducted by the school and took classes from the school for a small group in the church. Although the teaching staff of Northside is small, volunteers who make music, art, physical education, drama, and other courses can be added to the school. And those are seen under.

As a Christian school, we want to teach Christian values along with academic subjects. —Gail Harrah in each subject, with discipline enforced through our system. We're very well pleased with the Advent Christmas program," Shoffner adds. "It's got some foundation under it." In 1983, schools using the Advent Calendar program have not been accredited, "we've been a group of independent people, and yet we have made strides in our school accreditation as a result," says Shoffner. Published results from non-accredited high school will not be made available to the public. Shoffner adds, from a core educational perspective, it will let the number of schools to which we can apply, since many will see it from an accredited education point of view. Perhaps the genius of the Advent program is that it stimulates a certain level of activity, where children at all ages play together, although girls' and boys' groups are respected. Students are required to attend college. The older students tend to guide and teach the younger ones.
