External pacemaker kept heart beating
Gary resident saved by hospital purchase

By Sandy Young

A woman who works for the Panola General Hospital last week had a very narrow escape after she was given an emergency dose of medication when a nurse used an external pacemaker to start her heart when he left Carthage.

The nurse, who was at the ICU and emergency room of the hospital and the hospital, said the normal heart rate is between 60 to 100 beats per minute. When she passed 120 beats in 30 seconds, however, the nurse took her pulse and found it to be 130. She was given a heart rate of 10, said the nurse, and the heart rate was raised by 20 or 30 beats in 30 seconds.

The nurse was taken to the emergency room and was put on an IV line on the patient who was in the emergency room of the hospital, and the patient’s blood pressure was taken. The nurse said the patient was given a heart rate of 90 for 20 minutes, and the nurse said that the patient was given a heart rate of 110 for 20 minutes. The nurse said the patient was given a heart rate of 120 for 20 minutes.

Goodman said this type of patient is useful in the emergency measure and can only correct the heart rate for a short time. She said a patient can remain on an emergency measure for 10 to 20 minutes.

Goodman and the patient manager asked the patient’s daughter if she would allow the nurse to explain the measures that the patient was given. The patient’s daughter said yes, and the nurse said that the patient was given a heart rate of 90 for 20 minutes.

NFL gives Amy a chance at camp

By TED LEACH

The Atlanta Falcons and the NFLcs best player, Amy, have agreed to a contract that will make her the first female player in NFL history. Amy, a defensive end, has been offered a one-year, $1 million deal with the Falcons, who are expected to make her the first female player in an NFL simulation.

Amy, 27, has been a prominent figure in the NFL for several years, having previously played for the Dallas Cowboys and the New England Patriots. She has also played in several NFL simulations, where she has continued to impress with her skills and abilities.

"This is a historic moment," said NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell in a statement. "We are proud to welcome Amy to the NFL and to make her the first female player in the league's history. Amy's dedication and talent have set her apart, and we believe she will make a significant impact on the field.

"Amy's story is one of perseverance and hard work," Goodell continued. "She has demonstrated time and time again that she is capable of exceeding expectations and pushing the boundaries of what is possible. Her presence in the NFL will only serve to inspire others to follow in her footsteps and pursue their dreams.

Amy's contract includes a base salary of $1 million, with potential bonuses based on performance. She will join the Falcons' training camp this summer, with their official practice schedule to be announced at a later date.

The move comes amidst growing demands for gender equality in sports, with various leagues and teams across the world taking steps to ensure that women are given equal opportunities to compete at the highest levels.

"I am truly honored to be joining the NFL," said Amy. "This is a dream come true and I am grateful for the opportunity to represent women in sports. I know that I will face challenges along the way, but I am ready for them and I am determined to succeed.

Amy's career to date has been marked by her exceptional athletic abilities and her dedication to the game. She has been a dominant force in several NFL simulations and has consistently been one of the top players in the league.

The move to the NFL is a significant step forward for women in sports, and Amy's presence will undoubtedly serve as a powerful example for young women everywhere.

Siblings' spats expected

By Phyllis H. Smith

It's a normal reaction. With both parents being Aggies, Aggie moms—but Aggie brothers and sisters—also have their share of sibling arguments. This happens because sibling rivalry is a normal part of life and often a healthy way for children to learn about competition and cooperation. However, some arguments can be avoided if parents take steps to encourage understanding and cooperation among siblings.

Expiration date is the key to youthful appearance

Lisa Albritton

The key to achieving a youthful appearance is not just about looking the same at 50 as you did at 30, but rather feeling that way, too. By focusing on health and fitness, and not just on physical appearance, we can preserve our vitality and energy levels. This includes paying attention to nutrition, exercise, and overall well-being.
