Beckville Mayor Thomas Adams announced recently that the city had received a grant of $38,000 to still a new water well and construct a water storage tank. The city manager, Charles Thomas, was quoted as saying, "With this grant, we will be able to provide a more secure water supply for our citizens." The grant is funded through the State of Texas' Community Development Program.

The grant was awarded to Beckville after a series of meetings with state officials and a thorough review of the city's needs. "This grant will be a tremendous help in our efforts to ensure the safety and health of our citizens," said Adams.

In Carthage, the city council also received a grant of $30,000 for the construction of a new city hall. The grant was awarded through the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) and will be used to construct a modern, efficient city hall that will serve the needs of the community for years to come.

"This grant will not only serve our present needs, but it will also set a precedent for future grants," said Carthage Mayor John Smith. "We are grateful for the support of our state and federal representatives."
Financial focus—preparing for a will

By Tom Watchman

When most people talk about a will, they usually think about the last will and testament. However, a will is just one part of a financial focus plan. There are other important aspects of estate planning that need to be considered as well.

In this article, we will discuss the different types of wills, the process of creating and executing a will, and how to make sure your wishes are fulfilled.

Types of Wills

There are two main types of wills: testamentary wills and intestate wills.

1. Testamentary Wills: These are the most common type of will. A testamentary will is a legal document that outlines your wishes for the distribution of your property and specifies the person or persons who are to receive your property after your death. The testator (the person creating the will) can also appoint a personal representative (executor) to carry out the provisions of the will.

2. Intestate Wills: If you die without a will, the state will determine how your property is to be distributed. This is known as intestacy. The surviving spouse or children of the deceased person will receive the property according to state law.

Creating a Will

Creating a will is a legal process. It involves making decisions about how your property will be distributed after your death. Here are the steps involved in creating a will:

1. Decide who will receive your property: Consider who you want to inherit your property and in what amounts.

2. Choose an executor: Appoint a person or a bank to be the executor of your estate. The executor will manage and distribute your property according to the terms of your will.

3. Draft a will: You can write your will yourself or have an attorney draft it for you. Be sure to include details about your property, your beneficiaries, and the executor.

4. Sign and witnesses: Sign your will in front of two witnesses. In some states, it may also be necessary to have your will notarized.

5. Store your will: Keep your will in a secure location, such as a safe deposit box or with a trusted friend or family member.

Executing a Will

Once you have prepared and signed your will, it is important to execute it properly. Here are the steps involved in executing a will:

1. Locate your will: Find your will in the place where you stored it.

2. Notify beneficiaries: Notify your beneficiaries of the terms of your will.

3. Notify the executor: Notify the executor of your will of your death.

4. Probate your estate: The executor will need to file a petition with the court to start the probate process. This will ensure that your property is distributed according to your wishes.

5. Distribute your property: The executor will distribute your property to your beneficiaries according to the terms of your will.

Making Sure Your Wishes Are Fulfilled

Once you have created and executed your will, it is important to review it periodically to make sure your wishes are still in line with your current financial and family situation.

If you are looking to create a will or need help with estate planning, contact a qualified attorney who can guide you through the process.
