When Do I Need to Have Cataract Surgery?

In the past, cataract surgery was not performed until the cataract was "ripe," but this is no longer true with modern techniques.

Today, the only consideration is whether or not the cataract is interfering with the patient's lifestyle. When the patient is unable to satisfactorily see things they need to see, the surgery can be done.

If you would like more information about when "cataract" cataract surgery, please call Dr. William Steen

Sybil's Scribbles

First thing I read today was an article in The Wall Street Journal about the new "Designated Driver Program" being piloted in some states. The idea is to allow a designated driver to take a group of people drinking to the bar and then return them to their starting point. The program aims to reduce drunk driving by giving people a safe way to get home. It's a good concept, but I'm not sure it will work. People still tend to get drunk and then drive home themselves. It's too easy to cheat the system.

Then I read an article about the new "3D Printing" technology. They're using it to create everything from body parts to car parts. It's amazing. I wonder if they'll ever come up with a way to 3D print a human body. That would be the ultimate in personalized medicine.

Finally, I read an article about the new "Microbes" being used to make biological weapons. I don't know if I want to read about that. It's a bit disturbing.
