State Capital Highlights

By Linda Williams

Capital life seems to mirror both the ups and downs of the political climate. On Tuesday, January 17, the House of Representatives was packed with people who had a five-hour wait to be seated. The House was debating the state budget, which is scheduled for completion by March 15.

The majority of lawmakers, including Governor Frank White, are still trying to decide how to fund the state's education system. The state budget is divided into 12 equal parts, each part representing a different area of the state's government. Each part is presented to the House of Representatives, which then votes on whether or not to fund the area.

Product Watch

The state's Department of Agriculture is currently working on a new product that is set to hit the market later this year. The product, which is a combination of locally grown fruits and vegetables, is expected to be a hit with consumers.

Pork Chopper

A new pork processing plant is set to open in the state later this year. The plant, which will be located in the outskirts of the city, is expected to create hundreds of jobs in the area.

Thank You

We would like to take this opportunity to say THANK YOU to all of our wonderful supporters. Your continued support is greatly appreciated.

It's a Fact!

The capital's population is expected to grow by 20% over the next five years.
