Strength For Living

BY JERRY BURNAMAN

I received a call last week from a woman who had recently lost her husband and was struggling with the transition to single life. She shared that she had been trying to make sense of her feelings and was feeling overwhelmed by the emotional impact of losing her partner. She was wise and sweet, and I could sense her genuine desire to find a way to move forward and find strength.

She was very open about the challenges she was facing, and I could hear the pain in her voice. I could relate to her struggle, as I have also experienced the loss of a loved one myself. We talked about the importance of self-care and the need to take time for oneself during such challenging times. I offered some tips on how to cope with grief and find strength in the midst of loss.

I encouraged her to seek support from friends and family, and to engage in activities that bring her joy and comfort. I reminded her that it's okay to feel sad and to grieve, but it's also important to allow oneself to heal and to find new ways to thrive.

She thanked me for the conversation and expressed a desire to keep in touch. I told her that she was not alone and that I believed in her strength. She agreed and said she would reach out for support when she needed it.

This conversation reminded me of the importance of being there for one another during times of grief and loss. I am grateful for the opportunity to help her and to continue to support her in her journey to find strength.

District court repeals Rule 23

Legal list abolished

By TOM GOODWIN

In 1982, the U.S. District Court in Colorado issued Rule 23, which established a framework for class action lawsuits. This rule has been essential for the justice system and has helped to protect the rights of consumers and employees. However, this year, the court has ruled that Rule 23 should be abolished.

The court's decision is a significant victory for consumers and employees. It means that class action lawsuits will no longer be allowed, which could have a major impact on how cases are handled in the future.
