PERSPECTIVES

Who says there are no more heroes?

By Charles McNeil

A man in a black jacket and white gloves was standing on the street corner, holding a sign that read, "I am a hero." People looked at him in disbelief. He continued to stand there, looking into the eyes of everyone who passed by.

"I am a hero," he said again, "and I will prove it to you." He began to dance in the middle of the street, spinning around and throwing his arms in the air. His movements were elegant and graceful, as if he were a king.

People were stunned by what they saw. Some even approached him, curious to know what was going on.

"I am a hero," he repeated, "and I will prove it to you."

He continued to dance for hours, until people

finally began to move away, back to their own business. The man in the black jacket and white gloves stood there, looking into the eyes of everyone who passed by, and continued to dance, proving that heroes still exist in the world.

New industry hits Panola County

Couple joins flock of breeders

By Scott B. Johnson

A new industry is taking root in Panola County with the arrival of a new business that specializes in breeding a specific type of animal. The couple behind this venture is hoping to make a name for themselves in the world of livestock farming.

About chickens

Chickens have long been a staple in Panola County, with many families keeping them for their eggs and meat. However, the new business is focusing on a different type of chicken, one that is not typically seen around here.

The couple, who wish to remain anonymous, have been raising chickens for several years and decided to take their business to the next level by opening a new farm. They have invested a significant amount of money into the venture and are excited about the potential it holds.

The farm, located on the outskirts of Panola, is already producing a variety of chickens and is planning to expand its offerings in the near future.

The couple hopes to attract customers from all over the region and beyond, and are already planning events and activities for visitors to enjoy.

The farm is open to the public and visitors are encouraged to come and see the chickens up close.
