Local merchants make registers ready

Tax hike rapidly approaching

Local merchants in Panola County will have very little time to prepare for the quarterly sales tax hike approved by the state legislature. The new tax, which affects all county residents, goes into effect this week.

The new tax, which goes into effect this week, will take a 2% increase on all sales. This means that merchants will have to make adjustments to their registers and pricing systems to ensure they are complying with the new tax regulations.

The tax will affect all types of businesses in the county, including retail stores, restaurants, and service providers. Merchants have been notified about the tax increase and are preparing to implement the necessary changes to their systems.

One merchant, who requested anonymity, said, "We're doing our best to make sure we're prepared for the tax hike. We've been notified by the county and have made the necessary adjustments to our systems."

The new tax is expected to generate an additional $2 million in revenue for the county each year. This revenue will be used to fund various county programs and services.

The tax hike is part of a broader effort by the state legislature to increase revenue and address budget shortfalls. Other states have also implemented similar sales tax hikes in recent years.

Despite the increased taxes, many merchants remain optimistic about the future of their businesses. "We're just doing our best to adapt to the new tax regulations," said another merchant. "We understand the need for increased revenue and are committed to complying with the new tax laws."

The county is expected to release a report detailing the impact of the new sales tax in the coming weeks. The report will provide further insights into how the tax increase will affect local businesses and residents.

Right to die: No clear answer to the dilemma

The right to die is a complex and controversial issue. Some argue that the right to refuse life-sustaining treatment should be respected, while others believe that it is the responsibility of medical professionals to preserve life. The debate continues, with no clear answer in sight.

Rosalyn Bagwell's foster home for the elderly has been a dream for 15 years. Now it's become a reality and her labor of love.

By Julianna Bryant

Media of cleaning, whitening and painting have turned this old Tiller house into a modern home for the elderly. "I've been waiting for this house to happen for 15 years," Rosalyn Bagwell of Carthage said.

Bagwell, a retired home health aide, is the owner of a two-story home in Carthage. The home has many elderly people who live there and need a place to call home. "People are living much longer, and there is much more money being spent on medical care, so it's going to be a personal care home for a lot of people who need a home, a ready home. I've been looking at houses for 15 years, trying to give them an opportunity to live in the rest of their lives happily and not in institutions. I was told it was to be a home away from home.

Located in one of the four blocks of the area known as "the town," the house is surrounded by a large yard and has a large garden. The house has a concrete foundation with drainage pipes and is expected to be completed within the next 6 months, Bagwell said.

"The house is being built with things that are going to be a place of safety," Bagwell said. There are hardscaping, soil and water systems, and a safe space for the elderly to relax.

"When we open the house, I want to start with four residents, we're focused on building a home for elderly people."

In addition to the four living areas, which include a large living room and a recreation area for the elderly, the house has a kitchen, a large-equipped kitchen, a large dining area, and a large bathroom. The kitchen and living space are perfect for living, cooking, and enjoying the outdoors.

"The house overlooks the Davis Sisson School, and I think the atmosphere will enjoy watching the children play," Bagwell said.

The house has a versatile design and a permanent feature, which is a registered nurse who resides on the second floor and sees the elderly on a regular basis. A registered nurse has been hired.

"People are living so much longer, and there is much more living for the elderly have left to do," Rosalyn Bagwell.

According to Bagwell, there are elderly people in the area who will benefit from the house.

"The house is a wonderful idea," Tufts University Edith Hammond said. "Because there are so many more elderly now, the younger generation doesn't always have the time to provide fellowship and companionship to them. There are a lot of people who are lonely and living alone, and a house like this would be wonderful for them."

The house was inspected by health inspectors from the Texas Health and Home Care Services.
